GENESIS—JOSHUA

FORD OF THE RIVER JORDAN, SHOWING WHERE THE ISRAELITES CROSSED THE JORDAN. [JOSHUA iii:14,16]—"And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents, to pass over Jordan, and the priests bearing the ark of the covenant before the people . . . that the waters which came down from above stood and rose up upon a heap very far from the city Adam, that is beside Zaretan; and those that came down toward the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, failed, and were cut off: and the people passed over right against Jericho." In the above picture we have a view of the ford of the river Jordan where the children of Israel passed over. It conforms to the requirements. It is right against Jericho, and is known as the ford of the river Jordan. In this picture we are looking down the river. The mountains we see in the distance are the Judean mountains. This is but a little distance, about 100 yards, from the place where Christ was baptized.

INTRODUCTION

The Holy Land, with the regions immediately adjoining, constituting the most sacred of the Bible Lands, does not lose its peculiar interest to the most advanced student of history, civilization, biography and human nature. News from Jerusalem, by cable or post, attracts the attention of both religious and non-religious readers. There was never a time when tourists flocked with more pleasure and curiosity to the haunts and homes of the principal Bible characters. There was never a time when pilgrimages, religious and scientific, were more popular. Again, the Palestine Exploration Fund of England has secured a permit from the Turkish Government to renew and extend its investigations of the soil underneath and about the Holy City. The shrill whistle of the locomotive has echoed among the mountains and valleys of Judea, and but recently a steamboat was launched on the Dead Sea. The European powers keep watch of each other, while all keep ward over the Holy places. And this not merely because of rival religious organizations, which diligently seek advantage in their search for sacred sites or hidden treasures, or build shrines at which to bow in reverent worship, but also that they may guard well this whole region that lies between the North and South, the Mediterranean highway on the west, and the approach to India on the east.

If Christianity were effete, and simply an historic memory, there would be the same interest in Palestine that classic students now feel in the researches of Schliemann and others, in Western Asia Minor and in Greece; but Christianity is a living verity. Its founder declared that He would draw all men unto himself, and commissioned his apostles to "Go into all the world, and preach this gospel to every creature," declaring: "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The Christianity of the age is vital. It has greater power among men than at its genesis. Its promises have been fulfilled through the centuries. The civilization of which it is the basis and directing force, is the dominating civilization of the world today. The Book which records the marvels of His life, who "spake as never man spake," was never studied so critically, thoroughly and enthusiastically as now. Biblical research is the passion of the age. To it Philology, studies in Comparative Religion and Ethics, and Archæology—with spade and magnifying glass—pay constant tribute. The careful student of language, the Biblical exegete, the popular preacher, the Bible class teacher, the private unofficial Christian, turn eager eyes toward these sacred regions, to see every discovery that may shed further light on the Book of Books, and on the life of Him, who, as the ages go by, occupies a larger place in the civilization of our planet.

War, pestilence, earthquake, and all the sources of devastation which, through the centuries, have swept over the eastern world, have removed many landmarks, and destroyed immense quantities of valuable material. But in the Far East, and especially in Palestine, the contour of the country remains. Jerusalem still stands on her high hills, with the valleys of Hinnom and Jehoshaphat round about; with Olivet to the east, and beyond Olivet the desolations of Judea and below Judea the Ghor, and the salt waters of the Dead Sea, while beyond them rise in majesty the mountains of Moab, that stretch out in vast tablelands towards the Euphrates. Ebal and Gerizim still stand in the center of Western Palestine; and there, too, is the plain of Esdraelon, with Tabor and Gilboa, with Nazareth and Tiberias beyond. There, too, rise Hermon—the snow-crowned—and the lofty Lebanon, while at the base of Anti-libanus, amidst the flowing waters of Abana and Pharpar, stands the Pearl of the East, the mother of all cities—the ancient Damascus.

The ages have not materially changed the climate of Palestine. Still the heavy dews fall, the early rain and the later rain come down in their appointed seasons. The hot wind blows from the south and the north wind brings strength and gladness. The fields are still, in their season, white unto the harvest; and from the sea come mist and clouds, the rain, the hail and tempest. It is the old land, the same to-day as in the past yesterdays.

The manners and customs of this Eastern country have not been changed. People dress and eat and sleep and live and labor as they did two thousand years ago. The scenes of the Bible are reproduced with startling fidelity to the old record. One may find feasting and funeral, seed-sewing and harvest, elders in the gate and veiled women, grass on the housetops, sparrows seeking their nests in holy places, the grass of the field that to-day is and to-morrow is cast into the oven. The old customs and costumes remain.

The general scenic features of Palestine render it interpretative of Biblical events and shed light upon difficulties which, but for the perpetuity of its features, would have been unsolvable problems. Every traveler through Palestine discovers and makes report of these features and finds his faith in the Book confirmed. It is this feature which renders so valuable the contribution of the present work to the illustration of Biblical history. The perfection of photographic art is reached in the production of this series. The land is brought within the purview of every reader. Here, in the fine atmosphere of the Syrian skies, are presented hills, mountains, valleys, plains, water-courses, ruins, towns, cities, fountains, fields, mosques, churches, beasts of burden, flowers of the field, and whatsoever else the sun can copy on the sensitive plate hidden in the camera.

The student is invited to the turning of its leaves as to a walk through picture galleries and museums, with the hope by its editors that the "Land of all Lands" and the "Book of all Books" may gain, through this pleasant ministry, a firmer hold on head and heart than ever before.

John Vincent

THE EXPEDITION

It is the aim of this work to bring the Land and the Book closely together, so that each may add interest to, and throw light upon, the other, and with that end in view the publishers conceived the idea of enriching it with actual photographs of scenes of Bible events and of the places where the great men of the Bible lived. Photographs of various kinds might have been secured in New York or London for almost a trifle, but they wanted first hand and authentic views so that, in the setting together of picture history and scripture we might have a new work, appealing to old and young alike, as much as any novel.

It is a "true story," now for the first time illustrated—not by portraits and copies of well-known pictures, but by photographs of the actual places as they appear to-day. These photographs have been pronounced to be as fine as the art of the camera could make them. To secure them, the publishers, at a cost of $25,000.00, engaged the writer of this and Prof. Robert E. M. Bain of St. Louis, one of the most distinguished photographers of America, to make a tour of the lands about the Mediterranean Sea. About all we have of civilization, as well as religion had its origin around the shores of this classic sea. The wonders of the world are to be seen here. Egypt and her Pyramids, the unsolved riddle of the Sphinx, the wonderful River Nile—Herodotus called Egypt "The Gift of the Nile"—Palestine, the home of the Hebrew nation, whose mission was the grandest of all—"To teach righteousness."—They have transmitted to us this richest legacy, and have left a land filled with monuments which are traditional shrines that all the civilized world desires to visit, Phœnicia, whose people started the ideas of commerce and colonization, and who have left to us the greatest gift of all an alphabet, Damascus, "The Pearl of the Orient," the oldest city of all, Greece, the mother of art and politics, and Rome, from whence so much of civilization has sprung. "The Jews, the Greeks and the Romans are the most famous people in the world," for it is not extent of territory that makes greatness, but what they have given to the world.

We have fed upon the moral and spiritual productions of these lands for many centuries but for them and the lives that transfigured them we should not be what we are, or have the names we bear, the calendar we use, the history we know. The laws that were ordained and honored then regulate our conduct now. The hopes that were known and rejoiced in then refresh our spirits, so that in going back to Palestine, even if we do it by means of photographs, we are returning to the "birthplace of all nations."

We must, either personally or by representation, see the Land in order to clearly understand the Book—our own history, and our highest product.

I

The writer and the artist visited the lands about the Mediterranean Sea, which are known as Bible Lands. They spent some time in Egypt, where they visited Heliopolis, where Joseph married and where probably he met his father when he came down from Canaan. They visited Memphis, where Moses is said to have lived, and the Pyramids, built before Abraham came up from Ur of the Chaldees. They went to Alexandria, the school of the great Christian prophets, and leaving there, made their tour of the Holy Land. They landed at Joppa one Sunday morning, in April, and were met by pre-arrangement with a complete camping expedition with an outfit consisting of thirteen horses and mules, four muleteers, a sleeping tent, a cook tent, a lunch tent, a first-class cook and waiter, and the best dragoman in the East. With all this array of people, animals, cooking utensils and appliances for camping and traveling, they passed upon their tour of the Holy Land, taking in the places of historic interest and getting such pictures of them as the best appliances of the photographer's art made possible. They lived for a time amid the scenes and surroundings made interesting from the associations which had been gathering about them for thousands of years.

They were in Palestine in April and May, the months most suitable for getting the best view of the Holy Land. They were there at a time when the wild flowers literally covered the face of the earth. During these spring months, the flowers of Palestine stand in rows and squares and diamonds; they run up the mountains, illuminate the valleys, and peep out from the crevices of the rocks; they contest with the wheat for standing ground in the fields, and seem bent on claiming everything and occupying with their beauty every inch of soil that appears in sight; they adorn with their blooming radiance the most desolate and unseemly places; they perch upon the tops of great barren boulders, cling to their sides, throw their delicate heads down from their edges, absolutely embracing them as if determined in spite of altitude and weather to idealize them and make them luminous with their gay embellishment; they stand in regiments and platoons in the depths of great gullies the winter rains wash out of the earth, as if they wished to hide whatever of ugliness or deformity the weather had brought to their native land; they utilize every spot as if they would advertise to passers-by the fact that Palestine is God's favorite region; they seem to be attempting to declare the fact that though the land of God's people has passed from the hands of its friends and has come to see evil days, it still enjoys a munificence of heaven's good will no other country can claim.

So they not only saw the Holy Land in its general topographical features of mountain, hill, and plain, but they saw it at a time when it was as beautiful as when Adam and Eve lived among the flowers in the first garden of the world. Thus they were able to bring to illustrate this Library the reality and beauty of Palestine.

II

A few months later they reached the city of St. Louis, with all their dry plates containing pictures of the lands they had seen, having traveled fifteen thousand miles. Their boxes of glass plates had passed through the great historic cities of the world; they had been carried from place to place by railway cars, by express wagons, by carriages, by steamboats, by rowboats, by porters, by Americans, by Englishmen, by Frenchmen, by Italians, by Egyptians, by Arabs, by Turks, by Greeks; they had been in the holds of ships, piled on the decks of steamers, and strapped on the backs of mules; they had been to the Pyramids and over the road traveled by our Savior and the apostles; they had followed in the footsteps of Saint Paul in his missionary journeys, and had been to the city of Plato and Aristotle and in the home of the Cæsars.

And yet it was demonstrated in the dark room of the photographer that of all their exposed plates they had lost only a very few. This record of a remarkable journey, unseen and invisible until brought out by the chemicals of the photographers, really took the form of what the best judges have pronounced to be the finest pictures of Bible lands that have ever been taken. They were not such as some poet or artist had seen in his imagination, but were such as the sun had faithfully painted on the sensitive glass plate. Prof. George Adams Smith, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, Scotland, author of the Historical Geography of the Holy Land, after seeing the pictures which illustrate this work, says: "I have never before seen photographs which bring out so accurately and strongly the sweep of the hills and the aspect of the dominant features of the country, or give you such a wide and truly representative range of view."

"These pictures," as has been well said, "furnish a most important aid to the study of the history, not only of Palestine proper, but also of Egypt, Asia Minor, Greece, Rome, and the Islands of the Archipelago. The photographs mirror as they exist to-day the ancient cities of the countries above mentioned, sacred shrines, ruined temples, famous churches, magnificent mosques, historic highways, traditional tombs, holy fields, actual scenes of events in the life of Christ, and a hundred other features to delight the eye and engage the intellect."

III

Abraham comes up from Mesopotamia and stops at Sichem, where the Canaanites dwelt. At this point the reader is helped to better understand this place by having presented to his eye a picture of Sichem, or Shechem, as it is to-day. Abraham leaves Canaan and passes down to Egypt, and here the mind is given a new and wider impression of this journey by a picture of the Pyramids, which is one of the monuments that stood in Abraham's day. Abraham returns from Egypt and pitches his tent at Bethel. Here opposite the part of the Bible where this fact is recorded is a picture of Bethel. The herdsmen of Lot and the herdsmen of Abraham fall out, making it necessary for the uncle and the nephew to separate their families and their belongings. This portion of the Holy Scripture is illuminated by a picture of the Plains of the Jordan, which Lot selected when permitted by the generous heart of Abraham to choose his own place of abode. Abraham goes to Hebron and pitches his tent in that fertile locality. This particular part of the Bible is set off by a view of Abraham's Oak, that is said to stand upon the very site where the Father of the Faithful pitched his tent in Hebron. Rachel dies and is "buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem," and here stands a picture of Rachel's Tomb, found upon the very site where Jacob set a pillar upon her grave. Israel sends Joseph to find his brethren who had gone from Shechem to feed their flocks in Dothan. How the mind is helped in reading this interesting portion of God's word by seeing on the opposite page a picture of Dothan! Joseph is sold by his brethren to Ishmaelites who are on their way to Egypt, and here this scene is more deeply impressed upon the mind by a picture of the region in Egypt near On, where Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, to whom Joseph was sold, is supposed to have lived. After forty years of wandering in the Wilderness, Moses brings the Children of Israel in sight of the Promised Land. He goes up himself to the top of Nebo to take a view of the country, the only view he was ever to get of it in this world; and here this, one of the most interesting historical events in the career of the human race, is illuminated by a view of the plains of Sodom and Gomorrah, the very part of the Holy Land over which Moses looked from Nebo. Under the leadership of Joshua, after the death of Moses, the Children of Israel are led across the Jordan; and what could help the mind better to get a fresh and living view of this historic fact than a picture of the Jordan taken at the old ford where the Children of Israel crossed the sacred river?

Where Christ is represented by Matthew as being baptized in the Jordan by John, a picture is given of the place in the river where he was baptized. In the fourth chapter of John, where Christ is represented as waiting, weary with his journey, at Jacob's well at the noon hour while the disciples were gone to Sychar to buy meat, when the woman of Samaria came to draw water, and he delivered the discourse which was one of the most remarkable he ever uttered, this scene is made more real to the mind by the picture of Jacob's Well upon which he rested, and Mount Gerizim, to which he referred and to which he pointed in his conversation with the Samaritan woman. The wondrous scene in which Christ is represented as seeing the multitudes, and going up into a mountain and calling his disciples unto him and opening his mouth and teaching them, saying: "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of Heaven," is illustrated by a picture of the Mount of Beattitudes, where this discourse was delivered. The thirty years of Christ in Nazareth, the silent years of His earthly life, are illustrated by pictures of the actual hills and valleys and olive trees and streets and fountains where the Son of God grew up. Beside the first miracle in Cana of Galilee, as recorded in John's gospel, there is placed a picture of Cana of Galilee nestling quiet and beautiful amid its olive groves and prickly pear fences, with its little Greek church housing the very vessels which, according to tradition, contained the water which was turned into wine.

Thus the Old and the New Testaments, by the aid of these representations of the Holy Lands, become real books. The imagination, as informed by the eye, is helped to interpret them, and we believe that with these helps the history of these lands will become more tangible and interesting than ever before. While the pictures lend a freshness that would not be possible without them, when these are taken in connection with the rich notes in the wide marginal columns, and the pen pictures and reflections and illustrations and commentaries at the bottom of the pages, it is difficult to exaggerate the value of this work. It is a rare and rich mine of the most valuable information that can possibly be found on the Bible and its Lands.

MEMOIR OF REV. JOSIAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D.

Dr. J. L. Porter was admirably trained by his early education and his intimate knowledge of Bible lands, gained by his residence in the East, for the preparation of the annotations which he has contributed. He enjoyed the advantages of a private tutor in his boyhood who devoted to his instruction an amount of care that could not have fallen to his lot in any public seminary. His classical training gave a trend to his studies, and his early taste for language was fully satisfied when he was sent to Syria.

After the usual curriculum, he graduated as Bachelor of Arts and subsequently as Master of Arts in the University of Glasgow. Thence he passed to Edinburgh for the study of theology, commencing his course in the Divinity class of the University and afterwards completing his course in the Free Church College.

He was settled as pastor for a while over the old and interesting church in High Bridge street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. About this time the Irish General Assembly, of which he was a member, required an increase of the missionary staff, chiefly in the Jewish sphere of labor, and the leading directors, who had become acquainted with the young pastor of the High Bridge church, resolved to have him transferred to the East. He had already given evidence of his mental vigor by his articles which had appeared in the Journal of Sacred Literature, and for a length of time he contributed papers to that journal.

Arriving in the East, he settled in Damascus, where he applied himself with unwonted energy to the study of Arabic and Hebrew, with which tongues he became thoroughly conversant. In order to obtain a perfect mastery of oriental speech, he commenced a series of tours which served a double purpose; he found out his defects by intercourse with the people, and thus in his journeyings he speedily became fluent and accurate in conversation, while his travels were so arranged that ere long he found he had become familiar with Syria and Palestine east and west of the Jordan as well as Egypt. Wherever he went he aimed at accuracy and thorough investigation, thus preparing himself for a work which he did not anticipate but which he was subsequently called to perform.

He contributed a valuable series of papers which appeared in the Bibliotheca Sacra, the last of which, on the subject of miracles, was recognized as an essay of unusual clearness and peculiar power, and was published in 1873. Dr. Porter contributed to the journal of the Royal Geographical Society, and was the author of that remarkably interesting work known as "Five Years in Damascus." The second edition of this work contained a paragraph of special value, as it bears on the disputed question of the antiquity of many of the structures which still remain in the Lejah and the deserted cities of Bashan, and the candid reader will doubtless see that the position defended by the author is fully maintained. Dr. Porter was also the author of a well-known hand-book for Syria and Palestine, a work which for clearness, condensation, range of information and accuracy of statement is one of the most remarkable books of the age, and deserves a place in all private libraries. He also prepared numerous valuable articles which are accredited to his pen in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, as well as papers for the Encyclopædia Britannica. And in all of his articles there is a lucidity and pictorial power and condensation of information and mastery of description which places them in the front rank of all articles upon like subjects.

He published also a reply to Bishop Colesno, which is recognized as an admirable defense against the attack of a learned but erratic man. Another book from his pen is entitled "The Pentateuch and the Gospels," and in the same year in which that notable work appeared was published his "Giant Cities of Bashan," a book which has produced a great impression upon Biblical students and drawn earnest attention to the land lying east of the Jordan. Dr. Porter had been fully aware of the fact that nearly all European and American travelers in Palestine had merely visited the region which lay between the Sinaitic peninsula, the range of the mountains of Lebanon, the Jordan and the Mediterranean. The whole territory of Gilead and Bashan and all the districts to the east of the Jordan had scarcely been penetrated. And yet every intelligent reader of the book of Deuteronomy would expect that the conquest of these lands and their subsequent settlement and long occupation by the Israelites would have produced results as worthy of research and study as the scenes to the west of the Jordan. Accordingly Dr. Porter left Damascus, and facing great personal risks, his life at times being in imminent danger, he entered the celebrated Lejah, and sojourned in several of the deserted cities which yet remain and in their desolation afford incontrovertable evidence of the literal fulfillment of prophecy. In Bashan he gathered the material for his "Giant Cities," a work of surpassing interest which reads like a romance, and thus he has largely encouraged subsequent explorers to depart from the beaten track of ordinary visitors in Palestine and to study this far eastern region which though clothed in interest had been neglected until he led the way.

He contributed articles also for the Quarterly Review, the North British Review and the British Quarterly Review. He delivered lectures on Palestine, Jerusalem, Mohammedanism, St. Paul and The Huguenots. Such a record of literary labor shows that the author who was capable of producing such a number of works in the few years devoted to their preparation, while busily engaged in the arduous duties of a missionary, must have possessed an amount of acquired knowledge, a capacity for expression and a thorough mastery of the subjects on which he treats, to which few writers attain. Many thoughtful men, entirely devoted to literary pursuits, would require the greater part of a long life to produce so many and so valuable works. But the energy of Dr. Porter, was displayed in a manner which, in the face of dangers at times which would have deterred ordinary travelers, he repeatedly explored every district of Syria with a minuteness which left him fully master of his subject when he came to write, and carried him through the arduous toil of his work with a rapidity of execution which is only equaled by his great accuracy.

It was to be expected that a literary career of great eminence would be distinguished by his Alma Mater, and accordingly the University of Glasgow recognized his eminent attainments by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, and in the same month the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

It will thus be seen that the notes of Dr. Porter must be of special value, and that he has enriched this edition of THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE by information gained not only in the seclusion of the study but also by his personal travels and painstaking examination of every part of the Holy Land. His notes on all places which require topographical explanation are of great value, and they will be found by all thoughtful readers to cast a flood of light on the text. Dr. Porter, as a traveler, a student and a writer, has brought such elements of character, such attainments, to his share of this commentary as have stamped it with a character that needs no commendation.

The large body of annotations by which Dr. Porter has enriched this edition of THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE are not confined to the department of topography alone. He has not confined his studies to such questions only as pertain to the East. He has kept pace with the living minds of the age in the department of the natural sciences, as they are called, and he has devoted special attention to the questions which are discussed by the man who has a mastery of Ethnology, Physiology, Biology, Chronology, Geology, and kindred branches, to the detriment of the statements of revelation, who refuses to admit the possibility of a miracle, who would believe in motion without a mover, law without a law-giver, and who would set the world into being and carry it through all its changes and evolutions without the presence of God. On all points where definition and explanation require to be made against such adversaries his attainments are very evident in his annotations. His great theological learning, his intimate knowledge of oriental tongues, will also be patent to every intelligent reader who carefully studies the notes which he has supplied.

Still further, the doctrinal harmony and accordance of evangelical view which happily characterize his contributions secure a unity of sentiment and a freedom from discord that cannot be found in other celebrated commentaries on the inspired volume. In his dedication to Lord Dufferin of his "Giant Cities of Bashan," speaking of his work, he says:

"I believe there is still much, very much, to be done in the illustration of the history and language of the Bible by the thoughtful and observant traveler. Bible stories are grafted upon local scenes, and as is always the case in real history these scenes have moulded and regulated to a greater or less extent the course of events. Consequently the more full and graphic the description of the scenes, the more vivid and life-like will the stories become. The imagery of scripture, too, is eminently eastern; it is a reflection of the country. The parables, metaphors and illustrations of the sacred writers were borrowed from the objects which met their eyes and with which the first readers were familiar. Until we become equally familiar with these objects, much of the force and beauty of God's Word must be lost. The topography of Palestine can never be detailed with too great minuteness. Its scenery and natural products can never be studied with too much care. Bible metaphors and parables take the vividness of their own sunny clime when viewed among the hills of Palestine, and Bible history appears as if acted anew when read upon its old stage. I had opportunity during my long residence in the East of visiting regions seldom, some of them never before, trodden by European travelers. I have in most cases attempted to group together in a popular way the incidents and results of two, three, and occasionally many visits to the same region, filling in the events of sacred history and showing the customs of primitive life as illustrated by what passed before me. My aim has been to give as far as possible a complete picture and to enable my readers to see the distant past more clearly through the medium of the present. During all my journeys the Bible was my constant companion. I read its prophecies as well as its history amid the scenes to which they refer. I could not shut my eyes to the graphic details of the record, nor to the ruin and desolation of the land, and I could not resist the conclusion which a careful comparison forced upon me. Free thought and free inquiry conducted honestly, and in the case of the Bible reverentially, is the right of every man. This, while fully granting it to others, I claim for myself. I have in all cases attempted to exhibit two pictures, one of the country as seen by men, another as it is sketched by the Hebrew prophets. One thing, however, all eastern travelers must admit—the perfect harmony between the Bible and the land in which it was written. Even M. Renan, with all his prejudice, saw it, and has expressed it in language of equal truth and beauty."

Dr. Porter's "Giant Cities of Bashan" reads like a romance. He says: "From the remotest historic period down to our own day there has ever been something of mystery and of strange wild interest connected with that old kingdom." His notes, therefore, are of inestimable value because he penetrated regions comparatively unknown before. Western Palestine is traversed every year and has been described in scores of volumes, but the travelers who have been known to succeed in exploring Bashan scarcely amount to half a dozen, and the state of the country is so unsettled and many of the people inhabiting it are so hostile to Europeans, and in fact to strangers in general, that there seems to be but little prospect of an increase of travel in that region. This fact added greatly to the charm and instructiveness of Dr. Porter's visit. He says: "Both land and people remain thoroughly oriental. Nowhere else is patriarchal life so fully and so thoroughly exemplified. The social state of the country and the habits of the people are just what they were in the days of Abraham and Job. The raids of the eastern tribes are as frequent and as devastating now as they were then. The flocks of a whole village are often swept away in a single incursion, and the fruits of a whole harvest carried off in a single night. The implements of husbandry too are as rude and as simple as they were when Isaac cultivated the valley of Gerar, and the hospitality is everywhere as profuse and as genuine as that which Abraham exercised in his tent at Mamre. I could scarcely get over the feeling as I rode over the fields of Bashan and climbed the wooded hills through the oak forests, and saw the primitive plows, the yokes of oxen and goats, and heard the old Bible salutation given to every passer-by, and received the urgent invitation to rest and eat at every village and hamlet, and witnessed the killing of the kid or lamb and the almost incredible dispatch with which it was cooked and served to the guests, I could scarcely get over the feeling, I say, that I had somehow been spirited away back thousands of years and set down in the land of Nod or by the patriarchal tents at Beersheba. Common life in Bashan I found to be a constant enacting of Bible stories."

The readers of this work are therefore to be congratulated upon having placed before them in connection with the holy text, the observations and notes and comments and illustrations of Dr. Porter. They throw an immense flood of light upon places and customs characteristic of the peoples and lands of the Bible. Dr. Porter's notes are signed with the letter "P."

MEMOIR OF REV. HENRY COOKE, D. D., LL. D.

Dr. Henry Cooke was born near the village of Maghera, in the county of Londonderry, Ireland. His parents were members of the Presbyterian church, and he was brought up in the faith of his fathers. His father's family was of English origin, and his mother's ancestors were from Scotland. A few days after his birth he was baptized by the Rev. Mr. Glendy, pastor of the parish, who afterward left the country and settled in Staunton, Va., whence he was removed to Baltimore, where he long held a prominent place among the ministers of the Presbyterian church.

The young lad enjoyed such educational training as the retired district of his early home supplied. To his mother, who was a woman of rare intellectual endowments and of fervent piety, he owed much of his subsequent eminence. She directed his studies and led him on from one attainment to another, and as his remarkable powers were developed she gradually directed his views toward the gospel ministry. In this respect she followed the godly custom of those mothers in Israel who in Scotland and Ulster have for several generations directed their sons to the public service of God, holding, as they have done, that this service is the most honorable on earth and that they are eminently in the way of their duty when they dedicate the choicest of their sons to the Lord.

After such scholastic training as his native place afforded, he entered the University of Glasgow, where he passed through the ordinary curriculum preparatory to graduation in the arts. It appears that he attracted little notice while in college, and none of the professors seemed to discover that they had a brilliant genius under their care. In more advanced years, when duty called him, he was bold as a lion and calm in scenes of difficulty, but in his early years, before his powers had been tested and his great ability displayed in his intellectual intercourse with other men, he was retiring and even hesitating among those who were his inferiors in many elements of manhood. Though void of display and winning no scholastic fame, he laid the foundation for future eminence, and the training of the University told on his future life. In his mature years he often referred to the fact that although it was before the days of steamboats and railroads that he had to find his way to and from Glasgow by the tedious means of the conveyances which then existed, he enjoyed many advantages which in the present day of more rapid transit are unknown to the ordinary visitor in the commercial mart of the Clyde. He had to pass through several of the most hallowed scenes of Scotland, through districts which in the olden time had witnessed the contentions of men who had been faithful unto death in their testimonies for Jesus. He was able to turn aside from place to place, and he had leisure to mingle among the descendants and to see the homes of the martyrs. His highly poetic and deeply emotional nature was awakened, and his moral nature was stirred within him when he traversed the districts of Galloway, Ayrshire and Renfrew, for he knew that he was looking upon the fields which again and again had resounded with the voice of psalms and been dyed with martyrs' blood.

He was licensed to preach the gospel when only twenty years of age, and was ordained to the ministry in the church of Dunearn as assistant and successor to the aged pastor of that parish. In the Irish Presbyterian church the admirable usage has ever prevailed of showing a tender and beautiful regard for those men who have attained to age and hoary hairs in the ministry. Instead of harassing them with care and distress or starving them by want and misery, and thus compelling them to leave the people for whose temporal and eternal good they have given their lives, the practice has been to secure the aid of a younger man as an assistant to the enfeebled laborer. Mutually they aid and cherish each other, and when the aged minister is called to his rest, the younger remains as sole pastor of the church. It was as an assistant that Henry Cooke entered the ministry, but his connection with Dunearn was brief. His powers became known in the adjoining parishes, and he was soon called to and installed in the more important church of Donegore, in the same county.

In his new position his powers were quickened into great activity. He soon found that the inhabitants of his new parish were men who could judge of intellectual worth. Many of the population of his new charge were famed for their mental vigor and independence of thought, and they had always shown a desire for logical reasoning and oratorical power. As a people they demanded earnest study, thorough preparation and great mastery of every subject which was brought into the pulpit, and they soon found that their new pastor was all that they required of him. His application became intense. His great powers were earnestly applied to the preparation of his discourses. He cultivated graces of style, strengthened his wonderful memory by unceasing labor, and sought the mastery of every subject which he treated so as to be able to carry conviction home to the souls of all who were under his care. Very soon his fame spread abroad and his services were earnestly sought on public occasions and in behalf of institutions established for benevolent and charitable objects. The inhabitants of his parish were a thoughtful people and perceiving the splendid capacity of their pastor, as soon as they became aware that he desired the advantages of still further literary culture, they generously permitted him to remove for a time to Dublin for more mature study.

During his abode in the capital he fully realized the extent of the spiritual destitution which existed in the south and west of the kingdom, and at once entered on a course of services on the Lord's day in different and widely separated districts of the country. His pastoral care of this his second charge at length terminated by his removal to the still more important one of Killyleagh, and here after three years' ministrations an incident occurred which fully called forth his wonderful powers, and determined his future career.

His parish was visited by an English preacher who had been induced to undertake a journey through Ulster to disseminate Aryan views, as it was believed that the time had come to propagate in Ireland a more liberal system than that which was contained in the old doctrine. Great things had been expected of this emissary, and there was not wanting a considerable degree of boldness on his part in appearing among a people who were ministered to by a man of such recognized power as the pastor of Killyleagh. Forthwith in his own church, in neighboring parishes, and ere long through the length and breadth of the province, his voice was heard arousing the members of the church to stand fast in the faith of the gospel. He journeyed from parish to parish, and wherever he appeared vast crowds assembled to hear him. He managed thus to reach distant places during the week, and to be at home again with his own congregation on the Lord's day. Very seldom in the history of the church have such scenes been witnessed in any land as those in which this great preacher contended mightily for the faith as it was delivered to the saints. With a zeal that no effort could repress, with toil that seemed beyond the power of man to endure, with eloquence that electrified, and with a logical keenness that convinced, he swayed the largest audiences that crowded edifices could contain. Again and again he addressed the multitudes that assembled and hung upon his lips in the open air, and often these services were protracted into the darkness of the night. Thus he gave himself to the work of exalting the Lamb of God who became man and who died for us that we should not perish, and pointed to the perfect righteousness and complete redemption effected by the sacrifice on Calvary. He warned against heresy and error, and ere long his mighty influence was felt in every part of the church. Brethren were awakened and led to take their share in this great warfare. The value of the old doctrines and church standards became better known. The divinity of the Savior and the preciousness of his atonement, the value of his righteousness and the necessity of the Spirit's work were seen in their connection, and a great revival of religion followed all over the land. Ulster was quickened and refreshed by the Spirit from on high, and the Savior cheered and blessed the souls of his servants as in pentecostal days. To describe fully the results which followed the ministrations of Dr. Cooke over the province of Ulster would require a detailed and lengthy narrative. Setting out as he did as an opponent of Aryan and Socinian views, he drew the weapons of his warfare from the inspired Word. The spirit which he awoke extended, and wherever he went the people were induced to examine the scriptures with an interest that had not been witnessed for many years. Every argument of Unitarianism was examined, and the testimony of the Word of the eternal deity of the Son of God was set forth in all its convincing power. The mind of the rising generation awoke and ere long it was found that the youth in almost every church were becoming earnest Bible scholars. In rural districts, in secluded parishes, as well as in towns and populous churches, the popular mind was stirred. Discussions on the essentials of religion, with appeals to the Word of God as the legitimate and infallible authority in the strife, soon made the people so familiar with their Bibles that preachers and public speakers had no expectation of affecting any audience unless their principles were shown to be in accordance with and based upon scripture. Hence preaching in Ulster became eminently scriptural, and therefore evangelical. The old theology of the best days of the church was proclaimed with clearness and power, and the people felt that it was founded on the Word of God.

Beginning, as this movement did, with the defence of the Savior's divinity, it rapidly extended to his work and offices. Atonement, justification, sanctification, were seen in their inseparable connection, and thus the power of Bible religion rapidly spread. It told in the increased attendance of the people, and ere long the erection of superior church edifices by overgrown congregations and the increase of an earnest ministry attested the gracious character of the work.

As previously stated, Dr. Cooke soon attracted around him great and good men who gave themselves with earnestness, wisdom and great power to the cause which they loved. But faithful as they were, they all felt that in him they had a leader who in every emergency could be relied on, whose prudent boldness and readiness were acknowledged on all sides, and whose impassioned eloquence by its beauty and its power bore down opposition and carried conviction to every unprejudiced mind.

Dr. Henry Cooke was now recognized as a leader in Zion, and forthwith it was resolved that he should be removed to the capital of Ulster where his influence could be brought to bear on the masses of that growing center of commerce. Accordingly one of the largest edifices now to be found in the Irish Presbyterian church was erected in Belfast, in which he ministered until the close of his life. Episcopalians as well as Presbyterians contributed to this work, for the catholicity of his spirit was well known. In London and elsewhere he was recognized by the Methodists and other bodies as one of the most powerful of all the supporters of the great missionary undertaking, and his voice was yearly heard in the halls and churches of the metropolis in behalf of all the evangelical schemes of the day.

It is not the object of this sketch to write a eulogy or a biography. His praise is in all the churches, and his biography is already extensively known. The aim of this notice is simply to indicate the circumstances which gave prominence to his name, and which as they developed his unwonted powers prepared him for the contribution which he has made to this SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE. His years of contending for the orthodoxy of the church made him thoroughly intimate with every shade and turn of thought in the writings of both Old and New Testament. His memory, superior to that of most men, was as ready as it was retentive and active. He appeared never to forget anything, and words as well as sense and meaning were permanently fixed in his mind. Hence as a commentator he was ever able to collect before his mind and see at a glance all the passages of Holy Writ which bore on any subject he might have in hand. Even after his earnest student life began in his second charge, he gave dil-gent heed to Hebrew and Greek, and instead of losing these tongues because of the multitudinous engagements of a large pastorate he became more accurate in their study from year to year. Then again, in his great struggle for the maintenance of the orthodox faith he was led to see that the evangelical doctrine inevitably tended to personal holiness and entire consecration of life. As holiness is essential in divine life, for without meekness of soul there can be no preparation for heaven, his ministrations bore as fully on the spiritual side as on the doctrinal and dogmatic side of religion. And thus the whole range of his personal experience tended to prepare him for being a commentator on the Word. Splendid as his intellectual powers were, he was not only able to see clearly every doctrine distinctly and in relation to the points with which all the articles of faith were connected, but he possessed in a wonderful degree the ability to set forth the truth in language so nervous, terse and clear that his meaning could be understood. He never uttered a confused sentence, nor left a statement so that the meaning might be misconstrued, and his deeply emotional nature displayed its intensity by a tenderness and pathos which could flow only from a heart that was deeply exercised and where sympathy reigned. Some intellects are clear and cold like an icicle, but his powers on the other hand were bright and brilliant and warm and helpful as the bright beams of the sun in the splendor of his shining.

The fame of Henry Cooke had now extended to every part of the British Empire, and his name and services were so highly valued that the University of Dublin, although under Episcopalian control, conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Laws in recognition of his high attainments, his splendid intellectual powers and his eminent public services. In consequence of the recognized power of Dr. Cooke his services on public occasions were in frequent demand, and certainly no contemporary was so often engaged in missionary meetings and urgent claims of the Bible Society, whether in Edinburgh, Dublin, London or in provincial towns. And these labors were not confined to any one evangelical denomination. His presence on such occasions was so earnestly cherished that in the full maturity of his years he was able to command no leisure for the production of works such as he was qualified to write. He was in reality obliged to be a man of ceaseless action and to live for the exigencies of the church in his own age. During one of his visits to London, where he had been called to preach and take part in the great meeting of the missionary society and other institutions which for many years had been accustomed to bring reports of their many labors before the Christian community in the month of May, he met with a loss which deprived the world of a work to the preparation of which he had devoted several years of industrious labor. In form it somewhat resembled a concordance and dictionary combined. He had brought the teaching of the Bible into sections under different heads, these sections comprising not only the text of the Word, but such brief and terse explanations as made the work a commentary, and after long and patient labor he had completed it. He had brought the manuscript with him to London with a view to publication, but before he had submitted it to any publisher it was destroyed. During his absence at the public meeting the hotel in which he was sojourning was burned and his books, papers and raiment were all consumed. The providence greatly affected him, for he attached very great importance to the work, but while he bowed in submission to the will of God he saw the hand of mercy in saving his life, for the fire might have taken place in the night season and under circumstances in which escape would have been impossible. To command the time for the resumption of this commentary he afterwards found impossible.

His influence in London with members of the different administrations of government was widely known, and accordingly when the difficulties of the national church increased and the days of its disruption drew on, great reliance was placed in him by the brethren of Scotland. His clearness of judgment, his wisdom in counsel, his great love for the parent church and his deep interest in her well-being had long been recognized. He had thrown himself with all his vigor into the struggle for asserting the liberty and freedom of that church. He toiled, wrote, prayed and hoped, but only to stand and see the church left in the hands of power and freedom only to be had by the ministry coming out and leaving houses and lands and all worldly substance for the glory of Christ. He was thus one of the great workers in freeing the church of Scotland from the domination of the state.

The religious awakening which had followed his contendings for the maintenance of gospel truth in opposition to Unitarian and Socinian errors had resulted in the erection of new church edifices and in the formation of new congregations in Ulster to an extent that had not been formerly for more than a century. To preach at the dedication of these churches and to return to aid the members in the removal of debt was expected of him in every part of the country. Beyond all doubt he preached at the dedication of more churches, and rendered aid more frequently for the removal of incumbrance from church edifices, than any man of his day in any land. Nor were such labors confined to his own church, for in England and Scotland similar services were frequently required of him, and wherever he appeared he was heard with acceptance and a blessing followed his ministrations. Many of these demands were made on him in consequence of the known expansiveness of his great Catholic spirit. Methodists, Congregationalists, and others equally appreciated his services, and thus the very greatness of the man and the splendor of his pulpit powers kept him whether he would or not before the public, and left him no time for the manual labor required to produce the works that the brilliancy of his mind, the range of his acquirements and the abundance of his resources would have rendered easy for him to prepare.

His contributions to THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE were a labor of love. They brought the beauties of the Word to his own spirit, and thus his soul was refreshed by tasting as he went along from the wells that the Head of the Church had opened up from time to time along the church's history for the saints as they journeyed heavenward. The great demand that has been made for this work has proven the wisdom of his being selected in the great undertaking of making this rich commentary. In the service of the church, and as an eminent citizen, he was brought into intimacy with most of the leading statesmen of his age with whom he had much intercourse, and with the dignitaries of the Episcopal church as well as with the influential men of other denominations. By all of these his greatness was recognized and those men from whom he differed were all able to see that in his nature there was nothing narrow, nothing mean or bitter or selfish, and all classes felt that he was a great and good and lovable man. As he lived for the church in general, so he was obliged to live in public to a greater degree than any minister of his day, and his time was almost constantly occupied by the active service in which he was engaged. The notes of Dr. Cooke are signed by the letter "C."

MEMOIR OF REV. JOHN BROWN, D. D., LL. D.

Rev. John Brown, the author of Brown's Concordance, was a native of Carpow, a village in the parish of Abernathy and county of Perth. His father for the greater part of his life followed the occupation of a weaver. His parents were very pious, and he says: "My parents' instructions, accompanied by God's dealings, early made such impressions on my heart as I trust will continue with me to all eternity."

About the eleventh year of his age, while in the employ of a godly shepherd of Abernathy, he conceived the idea of one day becoming a shepherd of souls. He accordingly prosecuted his studies with increasing ardor and diligence, and soon acquired a considerable knowledge of Latin and Greek. These acquisitions were made entirely without aid from others except as he was able to snatch an hour when the flocks were folded at noon to seek the solution of difficulties he could not master from two neighboring clergymen, both of whom were very obliging and took great interest in promoting the progress of this studious shepherd boy.

At twenty-five years of age he established himself at Gaisner Bridge, a village in the neighborhood of Kinross, and there laid the foundation of a school. During Mr. Brown's incumbency, which lasted two years, this school was remarkably successful and attracted scholars from considerable distances. The practical character of his teachings, the accuracy of his learning, the intimate experience which as a self-taught scholar he must have had of elementary difficulties and the best mode of solving them, and the conscientiousness and assiduity which always formed distinguishing features of his character, must have peculiarly qualified him for the discharge of his duties and laid a solid foundation for his general acceptance as an instructor of youth.

He completed, when he was twenty-nine years of age, his preparatory course of study, and approved himself on trial before the Associated Presbytery of Edinburgh, and was licensed to preach by that body. He entered upon the sacred work with deep impressions of its solemnity and usefulness. He was called to be a minister in a quiet village town, somewhat like, perhaps, the town of Drumtochy, so well known through the writings of Rev. John Watson (Ian MacLaren).

The life of Mr. Brown at this period presents the usual monotony which characterizes that of a minister of a quiet country town. When he was thirty-six years of age he for the first time appeared as an author. When he was forty-five years of age he published "Letters on the Constitution, Discipline and Government of the Christian Church." Besides the above he published a dictionary of the Holy Bible, a general history, and also a history of the British churches. When he was sixty-one years of age he published a concordance of the Bible, and at this time was invited by the Reformed Dutch Church in America to become a Professor of Divinity in their college, but this he declined.

Throughout his writings Mr. Brown's uniform aim was to be helpful to the people. The mass of facts and sentiments which his works contain will prove a most valuable acquisition to those whom the author contemplated as his readers, that great body of the people who are not in a situation to engage in any deep and learned investigations for themselves, but who will take much for granted, both from the pulpit and press, on the strength of their confidence in the general ability and worth of their instructors. Keeping this idea of the writings of our author in view, we shall find in them not a little to applaud. The selection of subjects and the general conception of almost every one of them are very happy, and in many cases the execution proves his high endowment for the tasks he undertook. Of his superior qualities as an interpreter and illustrator of scripture, this edition of the sacred word forms a distinguished monument.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

EARLY ANGLO-SAXON VERSIONS.—Towards the close of the seventh century a monk called Caedmon wrote a poetical narrative of the creation, the exodus, and the incarnation and passion of our Lord in Anglo-Saxon. This is the earliest known translation of any part of the Sacred Scriptures into the vernacular language of England. A few years later Guthlac, the anchorite, prepared a version of the Psalms. In the beginning of the eighth century the Psalter was again translated into Anglo-Saxon by Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborn. Twenty-six years after his death the Venerable Bede translated the Gospel of John, the Lord's Prayer, and apparently also the book of Psalms. In the ninth century Alfred the Great placed an Anglo-Saxon version of the Ten Commandments, 'with such of the Mosaic injunctions in the three following chapters of Exodus, as were most to his purpose,' at the head of his Code of Laws. His biographer tells us it was the desire of this good monarch that 'all the free-born people of his kingdom should be able to read the English Scriptures.' Towards the close of his reign he began a translation of the book of Psalms, but did not live to finish it. In the same century Aldred, a monk of Holy Isle, on the coast of Northumberland, wrote an Anglo-Saxon version between the lines of a Latin copy of the Gospels. The manuscript is in the British Museum, and is called 'The Durham Book.' Another translation of the Gospels, apparently of the same age, and written in the same way, is in the Bodleian Library. Aelfric, who became Archbishop of York in 1023, translated some portions of the Bible, which were published in 1698 with the following title:—Heptateuchus, Liber Job, &c., Anglo-Saxonice.

The existence of so many different translations, or perhaps revisions, made during the darkest period of our country's history, shows that there must have been some desire on the part of a section at least of the people to possess the Holy Scriptures in their own tongue. Soon after the Conquest a man called Orme wrote a paraphrase of the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles in blank verse, which was printed in 1852. Towards the end of the thirteenth century a metrical version of the Psalms was made by an unknown author, of which six copies are still extant. About the year 1320 it appears that William of Schorham wrote an English translation of the Psalter; and about the middle of the same century Richard Rolle, the Hermit of Hampole, made another translation with a commentary. At this period the attention of the Norman clergy began to be turned to the Bible, and they translated the lessons ordinarily read in the services of the Church into Anglo-Norman. It would seem, however, that down to the year 1360 the Psalter was the only book of Scripture entirely and literally rendered into English. There are some short lessons from other books correctly translated; but all the longer works are loose paraphrases, poems founded on Bible narratives, or abridgments of the sacred text. None of them were literal, and none of them were founded upon the Hebrew or Greek originals. The Latin version was used as the text from which the translations were made, and most of the Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman translations of the Psalms follow the Gallican Psalter.

WYCLIFFE'S VERSION.—The fourteenth century introduced a new era in Biblical translation. John Wycliffe, to whom we owe the first complete version of the Holy Scriptures in English, was born in 1324. He was educated at Oxford, which he entered in 1340. His thoughtful mind was early turned to the great want of the age—the right means of educating the masses; and he resolved to meet the want by giving them the Word of God in their own tongue. He probably began the work at Oxford, by translating the book of Revelation, to which he added a short commentary. It was followed, after an interval, by a version of the Gospels, with an exposition, made up chiefly of extracts from the exegetical writings of the fathers. In 1374 he was presented to the living of Lutterworth, in Leicestershire. There, in the parish church of St. Mary, which still stands, he preached the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. A single sentence from one of his sermons shows his views regarding the importance of the Bible:—'All truth is contained in Scripture. We should admit of no conclusion not approved there. There is no court besides the court of heaven. Though there were an hundred popes, and though all the friars in the world were turned into cardinals, yet we could learn more from the Bible than from that vast multitude.' At this time he was actively engaged in the translation of the Scriptures. He completed the New Testament about 1380. The translation was from the Latin, yet it set forth substantially the doctrines of the gospel. The printing-press was then unknown. Every copy had to be written by the hand. Wycliffe appears to have employed a number of scribes, but they were unable to supply the growing demand. Foxe tells us that some of the yeomen were so anxious to obtain the Word of God, that they often bartered a load of hay for a few chapters of St. Paul.

Having completed the New Testament, Wycliffe arranged with his friend Nicholas of Hereford to undertake a translation of the Old. It was begun, but ere it was finished the Romish prelates were informed of the design. Nicholas was summoned before a synod of friars in 1382, and on the 1st of July was excommunicated. He appealed to the pope: went to Rome; was tried there and imprisoned, but effected his escape. He does not seem to have returned again to England during Wycliffe's life. Wycliffe himself, therefore, resumed the work of translation, and completed it before his death in 1384.

Immediately on the issue of his New Testament Wycliffe was charged with heresy, and cited before an ecclesiastical convention at Oxford in 1382. The charge in some way failed, yet he was expelled from the university. He was afterwards summoned to Rome, to answer before the pope charges preferred against him. He was unable, even had he been willing, to go. His health was fast failing, and he died in 1384. The enmity of Rome followed him to the tomb. In the year 1415 the Council of Constance—the council that burned John Huss—decreed that the ashes of the English heretic should be cast out of consecrated ground; and thirteen years afterwards that decree was carried into effect.

Wycliffe's translation was revised by John Purvey, curate of Lutterworth, who lived with Wycliffe during the last years of his life. Purvey's copy of the original translation is still preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin; and attached to it is a prologue, in Purvey's own hand, explaining his plan of revision, and showing that it was very thorough; it is prefixed to the edition of Wycliffe's Bible edited by Forshall and Madden. It was Purvey's revision which was published by Lewis in 1731, by Baber in 1810, and in Bagster's 'Hexapla.' The original version of Wycliffe was published for the first time in the edition of Forshall and Madden, 1850.

Wycliffe's Bible prepared the way for, and gave a distinctive character to, the Reformation in England. The Reformation in other countries was largely produced and directed by men of commanding genius; in England it was mainly the result of the circulation of the vernacular Bible. Wycliffe's Bible was not perfect. It followed the Latin Vulgate with almost slavish literalness, all its corruptions being retained. The style is rugged. In fact the English language was then in its infancy; and for this reason the version was not fitted to occupy a permanent place.

TYNDALE'S VERSION.—About the year 1484, just a century after the death of Wycliffe, William Tyndale was born in Gloucestershire. He entered the University of Oxford at an early age, and devoted himself to scriptural and classical studies, which were probably, in part at least, directed by the celebrated Colet, who was at that period lecturing on the Greek text of the Epistles of Paul, and endeavouring to revive learning in England. A year or two before Tyndale arrived in Oxford two students sat under Colet, who subsequently became the most celebrated scholars in Europe—Erasmus and Sir Thomas More. Foxe tells us that while at Oxford Tyndale himself began to teach Scripture truth.

About the year 1512 Tyndale removed to Cambridge, attracted apparently by the fame of Erasmus, who was then Greek lecturer in that university, and who was kindling in his students an enthusiastic love of Greek literature, and at the same time a desire for such a religious reform as would secure the supremacy of Holy Scripture. Erasmus expressed his views with all plainness:—‘I totally dissent,’ he said, ‘from those who are unwilling that the Sacred Scriptures, translated into the vulgar tongue, should be read by private individuals. I would wish even all women to read the gospel and the Epistles of St. Paul. And I wish they were translated into all languages of all people, that they might be read and known, not merely by the Scotch and Irish, but even by the Turks and the Saracens. I wish that the husbandman may sing parts of them at his plough, that the weaver may warble them at his shuttle, that the traveller may with their narratives beguile the weariness of the way.’

The exact time when Tyndale formed the resolution to translate the New Testament cannot be fixed. The lectures of Colet at Oxford, and the bold teachings of Erasmus in Cambridge, could scarcely fail to impress his mind with the necessity of the work. About the year 1520 or 1521 he removed from Cambridge and became chaplain and tutor in the family of Sir John Walsh of Sudbury Manor, near Bristol, where he remained some two years. While there, he had frequent controversies with priests and ecclesiastical dignitaries, who were wont to assemble round the hospitable table of Sir John. On one occasion, while ‘communing and disputing,’ says Foxe, with a certain learned divine, ‘he drove him to that issue, that the said great doctor burst out into these blasphemous words, ‘We were better to be without God’s law than the popes.’ Tyndale hearing this said, ‘That if God spared his life, ere many years he would cause a boy that driveth the plough to know more of the Scripture than he did.’ The resolution to translate the Scriptures must have been formed before that time, and indeed it would seem as if the work were then near completion. Tyndale was only re-echoing the words of Erasmus, uttered at Cambridge some seven or eight years before, and is it not reasonable to suppose that words which made so deep an impression upon his mind may have led him to begin his translation at the university? In 1516 Erasmus’ first edition of the Greek Testament was published. It was eagerly studied by some of his former pupils and companions at Cambridge, and it afforded additional facilities to Tyndale. When his purpose to translate was publicly announced at Sudbury, he saw that he was no longer safe there, and he removed to London, hoping to obtain the protection and patronage of Bishop Tunstall, who was an admirer of Erasmus. The bishop declined to receive him; but he found a generous friend in Humphrey Munmouth, a merchant in whose house he resided nearly a year. Tyndale’s comment on his treatment at this eventful period is worthy of record:—‘I found not only that there was no room in my lord of London’s palace to translate the New Testament, but also that there was no place to do it in all England.’ And so, in the month of May, 1524, he left England for ever. At first he sought an asylum in Hamburg; then he probably visited Luther at Wittemberg, but if so, he must have returned again to Hamburg in the beginning of 1525, where he received ten pounds from friends in England, through Munmouth. His translation of the New Testament was now complete, and in order to have it printed he went to Cologne. There, new troubles awaited him. The work was put to the press in the celebrated printing establishment of Peter Quentel; and three thousand copies were to be issued in a quarto form, with notes. But a wily priest, called Cochlaeus, took advantage of the drinking habits of two of the printers, and wormed out of them the secret that an English New Testament was in the press. He applied to the authorities, and as Cologne was one of the strongholds of Popery, he obtained an order to seize Tyndale, Roye his secretary, and all his books and manuscripts. They were, however, apprised of their danger in time, and hastily collecting their treasures, they entered a boat, and escaped up the Rhine to Worms. In that city, where Luther had already planted the banner of Protestantism and of liberty, the first English New Testament was printed about the close of the year 1525. It was issued in an octavo form, from the press of Schöffer, son of the associate of Fust and Gutenberg, the inventors of printing. The title-page did not give the name of either translator or printer, and with the exception of a brief epistle ‘To the Reader’ at the end, the book contained nothing but the sacred text. Three thousand copies of it were printed, and these were immediately followed by an equal number of the quarto edition, the first sheets of which had been printed at Cologne. The whole were despatched to England early in 1526, but meantime Cochlaeus had written to inform the king, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Bishop of Rochester of what Tyndale was doing. The book was condemned, and active agents were employed to watch the seaports of the kingdom and seize every copy. But their efforts were unavailing. Copies of the New Testament were introduced and widely circulated through the country. For years afterwards the reading, and even the possession of them, was prohibited on pain of death. They were rigorously searched out by the officers of the church, and burned when discovered. So successful was the work of destruction, that of the quarto edition only a fragment, containing twenty-one chapters of the Gospel of Matthew, is now known to exist: it is in the library of the British Museum. A fac-simile of this precious fragment has recently been published, with a valuable preface by Mr. Arber. Of the octavo edition there are but two copies extant,—one, imperfect, in the library of St. Paul’s, London; the other complete with the exception of the title-page, in the Baptist College, Bristol. This latter volume has been beautifully reproduced in fac-simile by Mr. Fry. In August, 1534, an edition of Tyndale’s Testament was published in Holland, edited by George Joye; it contained many errors, and gave great offence to Tyndale, who issued a new and corrected edition in Antwerp three months afterwards. In the preface he says: ‘Here thou hast the New Testament or Covenant made wyth us of God in Christes bloude. Which I have looked over agayne (now at the last) with all dyligence, and compared it unto the Greke, and have weded oute of it many fautes, which lacke of helpe at the begynninge and oversyght did sowe therein.’ Every chapter bears evidence of Tyndale’s industry, and conscientious desire to produce a perfect translation. He not only re-examined the Greek text with critical minuteness, but he consulted the German of Luther, the Vulgate, and the Latin version of Erasmus, on all doubtful passages. He also improved the style of the English, making it more vigorous and idiomatical. His marginal notes are brief, but terse and thoughtful. It contains prologues to the several books, compiled chiefly from those of Luther; and at the end is a translation of the ‘Epistles taken out of the Old Testament, which are read in the Church after the use of Salisbury,’ on certain saints’ days and other special occasions. These embrace some verses from the Pentateuch, Proverbs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joel, Hosea, Amos, Zechariah, and Malachi, and from the Apocryphal books of Esdras, Wisdom, and Ecclesiasticus. They were evidently translated from the Hebrew and Greek originals, and are characterized by all the vigour and critical acumen of Tyndale. Although he published another edition of his Testament in 1535, yet on the whole that of 1534 may be regarded as the standard edition, and the crowning work of Tyndale’s life.

Immediately after he had completed the translation of the New Testament Tyndale resolved to translate the Old also. He appears to have given much attention to the study of Hebrew from the time of his arrival in Germany, but especially after the publication of the first editions of his Testament. On the 17th of January, 1530, the book of Genesis was issued from the press of Hans Luft, in Marburg. It was quickly followed by Numbers, Deuteronomy, Exodus, and Leviticus, each with a separate prologue; and the whole were soon afterwards published in one volume. The books in this volume (the only perfect copy of which is in the British Museum) were printed separately, and apparently in different presses, for Genesis and Numbers are in Gothic characters, the others in Roman. This was the first part of the Old Testament Scriptures translated into English out of the original Hebrew. Tyndale appears to have been its sole author, for though he met with Frith and Coverdale in Germany, there is no evidence that he was assisted in his work by either of them. There can be no doubt, however, that in translating he regularly consulted the Latin Vulgate and the German version of Luther; and in this he acted in the spirit of a true scholar, who, while exercising an independent judgment on all points, will at the same time avail himself of every assistance in the accomplishment of his work.

Some time after the publication of the Pentateuch, Tyndale prepared a translation of the book of Jonah, with a preface. It is a tract of twenty-four leaves, without place, date, or name of printer; but its authorship is indicated by the first words of the preface:—‘W. T. unto the Christian Reader.’ Only one copy is now known to exist; it, however, was reproduced in fac-simile by Mr. Fry, in 1863.

Tyndale’s translation, so far as it goes, is the basis of our English Bible. ‘In it the general character and mould of our whole version was definitely fixed. The labours of the next seventy-five years were devoted to improving it in detail.’ Tyndale’s sole object was to place the English reader, as far as possible, in direct contact with the inspired text. He had no party purpose to serve. He was a student of God’s Word, and not of the schools of human philosophy or ecclesiastical theology. He used every means of acquiring such a knowledge of Greek and Hebrew as would enable him to go to the fountain-head of revelation. He studied Greek, as has been seen, at Oxford and Cambridge, and Hebrew under the Jewish rabbins of Germany; and he studied with such success that his scholarship was lauded even by his enemies. He cast aside, too, all those ecclesiastical and theological glosses and dogmas which had become incrustated upon the words of Scripture. He employed a vigorous Anglo-Saxon idiom and phraseology. Throughout his whole translations there is the stamp of sterling honesty. No word is selected to please any man, to advance any party, or to favour any particular dogma. With perfect sincerity and truth he was able to say, ‘I call God to witness, that I never altered one syllable of God’s Word against my conscience.’

Some time before his imprisonment Tyndale formed a close friendship with John Rogers, the reformer and martyr. Rogers was educated at Cambridge, where he was distinguished for classical scholarship. Having taken orders he was appointed chaplain to the English merchant company at Antwerp. There he met Tyndale, was convinced of the errors of the Church of Rome, and became an ardent student of Scripture. He appears to have assisted Tyndale in revising his editions of the New Testament and the Pentateuch, published in 1534, and in his other literary labours: 'and to him was bequeathed, according to a tradition that has never been disputed, the honour of completing that great work to which Tyndale had consecrated his life.'

COVERDALE'S BIBLE.—Tyndale's capture was planned in London. The man who, under the guise of friendship, basely betrayed him, was sent specially from England for that purpose. The only crime of Tyndale was his love of divine truth, and his success in giving to his countrymen the Word of God in their own tongue. And yet, while steps were being taken to effect his imprisonment and death, Crumwell and Cranmer, then rising into favour at the English court, were instigating Miles Coverdale to prepare a translation of the whole Bible. The Convocation which met in London at the close of 1534 petitioned Henry VIII. 'that the Sacred Scriptures should be translated into the English tongue by certain honest and learned men named for that purpose by his majesty, and should be delivered to the people according to their learning.' It appears that the work of translation made some progress, though it is not certain whether the king granted the prayer of the petition. Meantime, however, Coverdale had been labouring quietly somewhere in Germany, and on the 4th day of October, 1535, he published the first edition of the entire Bible in English. The book is printed in a very peculiar German type, and there is no name of place or printer in it. The most probable opinion is, that it was executed at the press of Fröschover in Zurich. Its title, which is surrounded by quaint woodcuts, is as follows:—'BIBLIA: The Bible, that is the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testament, faithfully and truly translated out of Douche and Latyn in to Englishe.' The translation was not made from the original languages. Coverdale was not qualified for such a task. His knowledge of Hebrew appears to have been limited. He states with commendable honesty in his dedication to Henry VIII.:—'And as I do with all humbleness submit mine understanding and my poor translation unto the spirit of truth in your grace, so make I this protestation (having God to record in my conscience), that I have neither wrested nor altered so much as one word for the maintenance of any manner of sect; but have with a clear conscience purely and faithfully translated this out of five sundry interpreters, having only the manifest truth of the Scripture before mine eyes.' The 'interpreters' to which he alludes were probably, 1. The German of Luther; 2. The Swiss-German of Leo Juda, published at Zurich 1525-29; 3. The Latin of Sanctes Pagninus; 4. The Vulgate; 5. The English Pentateuch, Book of Jonah, and New Testament of Tyndale. One characteristic of Coverdale's as compared with Tyndale's translation is, that it adopts ecclesiastical terms freely from the Vulgate, such as 'penance,' 'priest,' 'church,' 'confess.' Another characteristic is that smoothness and rhythm are frequently studied more than exact literality in rendering. It follows Tyndale's version very closely in the Pentateuch and New Testament, and any changes introduced are taken either from the German or the Vulgate. In the poetical books, as he had no English guide, he translated almost verbatim from the Swiss-German.

Coverdale's Bible was freely admitted into England, and was sanctioned by Cranmer, who became Archbishop of Canterbury in 1533. In some of the copies now existing there is a variation in the title and in the wording of the dedication, from which we may conclude that a new title was printed and affixed to some copies when offered for sale in England. The new title omitted the words 'out of Douche and Latyn;' and in the dedication 'Queen Jane' (Seymour) is inserted instead of 'Queen Anne' (Boleyn). In 1536 an injunction was issued by Crumwell to the effect that a copy of the English Bible should be placed in each parish church throughout the kingdom, 'for every man that will to look and read therein.' Coverdale's was the only English Bible then extant, and consequently it may be regarded as the first authorized version. In the same year, or, as some suppose, early in 1537, a new and revised edition was issued from the press of James Nycolson, Southwark, and was the first complete English Bible printed in England; at the foot of the title-page are these important words:—'Set forth with the king's most gracious licence.'

While these great changes were taking place in England, the life of William Tyndale was drawing to a close. His enemies in England had placed him in the iron grasp of Popery, and its hierarchy resolved to revenge upon him the loss of a kingdom. On the 6th of October, 1536, he was burned in Vilvorde. His last words were worthy of the cause for which he lived, and for which he died. Standing beside the stake, he lifted up his hands and prayed:—'Lord Jesus, open the eyes of the King of England.'

MATTHEW'S BIBLE.—It appears that while Tyndale was in prison he laboured, whenever opportunity offered, at his chosen task of translating the Bible. Ere his death he had probably advanced as far as the end of 2 Chronicles. His manuscripts fell into the hands of his former associate John Rogers, who resolved to complete the work. In this he was aided by a person called Thomas Matthew, in whose name the book was published. It was printed in August, 1537, at some place on the Continent, but chiefly at the expense of two citizens of London, Richard Grafton and Edward Whitchurch. It was made up of Tyndale's Pentateuch of 1534, and New Testament of 1535, his manuscript translation of Joshua to 2 Chronicles, with Coverdale's version of the remaining books of the Old Testament. Through Grafton's influence with Cranmer, the king's licence was obtained; and thus, not quite a year after Tyndale's martyrdom, his Bible was distributed in England by royal authority. In the preceding year (1536) Tyndale's New Testament, as revised by him in 1534, was printed in London, by Thomas Berthelet. This book has a special interest, because it was the first portion of the English version of Holy Scriptures printed on English soil.

THE GREAT BIBLE, CALLED CRANMER'S.—The authorities in England were not satisfied with either Coverdale's or Tyndale's version, both of which obtained a wide circulation in 1537. 'The first was imperfect in its conception; the second was burdened with notes and additions which could not fail sooner or later to call out bitter antagonism.' Crumwell and others, therefore, resolved to have a new English translation prepared. Much obscurity exists both as to the way in which it was prepared, and the parties who originally planned it. Some say Rogers had a leading part in it. It seems, however, that Coverdale was ultimately selected as editor, and Grafton as publisher. Matthew's Bible was adopted as the basis, but the text was carefully though not very judiciously revised. Coverdale states in letters to Crumwell how the revision was conducted:—'We follow not only a standing text of the Hebrews, with the interpretation of the Chaldee and Greek; but we set also in a private table the diversity of readings of all texts, with such annotations in another table as shall doubtless delucidate and clear the same.' The changes made in Tyndale's Pentateuch and historical books are chiefly after the version of Sebastian Münster, which was published at Basle in 1534-5; but some of them are from the Vulgate. In the New Testament Tyndale's version is considerably modified, so as to bring it into closer conformity to the Vulgate. A large number of short phrases, like glosses, have been introduced into the text, especially in the New Testament, from the Vulgate, which have no equivalents in the original. Some erroneous renderings were also adopted from the same source, one of which may be mentioned, as it is unfortunately retained in our Authorized Version. It is John x. 16, which Tyndale translates correctly as follows:—'And other sheep I have which are not of this fold. Them also must I bring, that they may hear my voice, and that there may be one flock and one shepherd.' In the new translation it was rendered, 'And other sheep I have which are not of this fold. Them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd.' The force of the passage is here lost by confounding the Greek words αὐτῶν, 'a fold,' and ποιμνῆς, 'a flock,' both of which are rendered 'fold,' the reviser following the Vulgate, which has ovile in both places.

The Book of Psalms was revised with more success than any other part of the Bible. This did not result so much from a stricter adhesion to the Hebrew text, as from a careful study of Luther's version and the Swiss-German, which are distinguished by a regard to the spirit rather than to the letter and idiom of the original. The language is smooth and flowing, and therefore the translation is often paraphrastic. It is perhaps, for this reason, better adapted for chanting, and for the public services of the church. This Psalter is still retained in the English Prayer-book.

The printing of the Bible was begun in Paris towards the close of the year 1538, by royal licence; but ere it was completed the licence was withdrawn, and the sheets were seized by the Inquisition, and condemned to the flames. Some were saved, bought by Grafton, and imported to England. Grafton afterwards succeeded in bringing over workmen, presses, type, and paper to London, where THE GREAT BIBLE was published in April, 1539. As first issued there was no prologue; but in November of the same year a prologue was written by Cranmer, and inserted in all the copies remaining. The prologue contains some account of the early circulation of the English Bible, as well as a defence of the policy of printing and distributing the Scriptures in the vernacular, and a strong exhortation to every man to read for himself. In April, 1540, a new edition was printed by Grafton, the title-page of which mentions the prologue 'made by the reverend father in God, Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury,' and adds, 'This is the Bible appointed to the use of the churches.' It was apparently the insertion of Cranmer's prologue which gave to this book the name of 'Cranmer's Bible.' Three other editions of it were published in the same year. The last of these, 'finished in November,' has the following title:—'The Bible in English of the largest and greatest volume, authorized and appointed by the commandment of our most redoubted Prince and Sovereign Lord King Henry the VIII., supreme Head of this his Church and realm of England: to be frequented and used in every church within this his said realm, according to the tenor of his former injunctions given in that behalf.'

TAVERNER'S BIBLE.—In the year 1539, while The Great Bible was passing through the press, Richard Taverner, a lawyer and good Greek scholar, edited another Bible, which was printed in London by John Byddell for Thomas Berthelet. It was based on Matthew's Bible; but in his revision he attempted to make the language more vigorous and idiomatic. His critical powers were not great, and his alterations, though occasionally giving more force and terseness, were not on the whole successful, and did not gain a permanent place in the sacred literature of the country. 'The Bible and the New Testament were each reprinted once, and his Old Testament was adopted in a Bible of 1551. With these exceptions his revision appears to have fallen into complete neglect.

From the year 1525, when the first English New Testament was printed, till 1542, thirty-nine editions of the New Testament and fourteen of the whole Bible, were published, in addition to a number of selected books and portions of Scripture, which were issued separately. The effect of the circulation of God's Word upon people of every age and class, was wonderful. Boys and old men, girls and matrons, flocked to the churches, where ponderous Bibles, chained to the massive pillars, lay open upon stands for the use of the public. Bishop Bonner, afterwards one of the most active of Queen Mary's persecuting agents, set up six large Bibles in St. Paul's. Bishop Tunstall, who had been one of Tyndale's greatest enemies, and who was one of the prime movers in burning his New Testaments at St. Paul's Cross, was ordered by the king to edit a new edition of the Bible for use in every church throughout England; and this he did in 1540.

In the year 1542 a change took place. The papal party had for a time been regaining influence, and their rule now became paramount. Tyndale's Bible was proscribed; and no one, unless of noble or gentle birth, was permitted to read the Scriptures, under pain of imprisonment. On the death of Henry, in 1547, the reformers again rose to power. His successor, Edward, inaugurated a new era in the history of our country. He ordered the Bible to be carried before him at his coronation, pronouncing, as he did so, these remarkable words:—'That book is the sword of the Spirit, and to be preferred before these swords. Without that sword we are nothing, we can do nothing, we have no power: from that we are what we are this day.' During his brief reign, thirty-five editions of the New Testament and fifteen of the entire Bible were published. It is interesting to note how the sterling qualities of Tyndale's version recommended it to the English people. Of the editions of the New Testament printed, twenty-five were Tyndale's.

THE GENEVAN BIBLE.—Mary ascended the throne in 1553, and reigned five years. During her reign neither Bible nor Testament was printed in England. Rogers, Crammer, Latimer, Ridley, and others, who had so largely aided in giving the Scriptures to the English people in their own tongue, were burned at the stake; and some of the noblest of England's worthies were driven from their country, and forced to seek an asylum in Geneva. In that city, stimulated, no doubt, by the scholarship, eloquence, and enthusiasm of John Calvin, the English exiles were led to consider the desirableness of a new version of the Bible. None of those yet published satisfied critical scholars. 'The Great Bible' was even less satisfactory than that of Tyndale, and the changes and interpolations adopted from the Vulgate tended, in many cases, seriously to mislead the inquirer after truth. Geneva was at that time singularly adapted for the production of a new version. It was the centre of Biblical learning. Calvin and Beza, with others, were engaged in a critical revision of Olivetan's French version. A revised Italian translation was in preparation, under the care of Gallars and Beza. Robert Stephen, who had already distinguished himself in Paris, both as a scholar and editor, was then an exile in Geneva, where, in 1551, he published his Greek Testament side by side with the Vulgate and the Latin of Erasmus. Before leaving Paris, he had printed two editions of the Hebrew Bible, to one of which was attached the commentary of Kimchi on the Minor Prophets. Leo Juda's Latin version of the Old Testament was completed by Bibliander and Pellican, and printed at Zurich in 1543. A revised edition of Erasmus' translation of the New Testament was added to it in 1544. Beza's Latin version of the New Testament was printed in 1556. Castalio's Latin version was published at Basle in 1551, and his French version four years later. It was, therefore, under the most favourable circumstances that the revision of the English Bible was undertaken at Geneva.

The New Testament was first revised, apparently under the sole superintendence of William Whittingham, who had married the sister of John Calvin. Whittingham was educated at Oxford, and had visited most of the great seats of learning in Europe. On the accession of Queen Mary he fled to Frankfort, and thence to Geneva. He was an accurate scholar, and he had a sound judgment and a keen perception of the style best suited to convey the sense of the sacred text. In his preface he says, 'It was diligently revised by the most approved Greek examples and conference of translations in other tongues, as the learned may easily judge, both by the faithful rendering of the sentence, and also by the propriety of the words and perspicuity of the phrase.' This describes the character of the book. It was not a new translation. Tyndale's version was adopted as the basis. Stephen's recently published Greek Testament was the text used. The Latin of Beza was the chief source, or at least suggester, of the emendations upon Tyndale. Whittingham, however, exercised an independent judgment on each word and clause, though in the first instance his attention was probably called to defects by the renderings of Beza or Castalio. Indeed, in a few instances, Beza's rendering was followed in preference to that of Tyndale, though the latter was right. Still the revision was thorough, and on the whole judicious. It keeps very close to the Greek, and yet expresses the meaning, for the most part, in terse and idiomatic English. The New Testament was published on the 10th of June, 1557, with a Prologue, or 'Epistle declaring that Christ is the end of the Law, by John Calvin.' The expense of publication was defrayed mainly by John Bodley, father of the founder of the Bodleian Library. In addition to the merits of the translation, it had some peculiarities which contributed to its usefulness and popularity. It was the first New Testament in which the text was divided into separate verses. The verses, which had originated with Robert Stephen a few years before, had only been marked on the margin of his Greek Testament of 1551. Words which had no equivalents in the original, but which were added to complete the sense, were printed in italics. Short explanatory notes were also placed in the margin. Of these notes the translator says, 'I have endeavoured so to profit all thereby, that both the learned and others might be holpen; for to my knowledge I have omitted nothing unexpounded, whereby he that is anything exercised in the Scriptures of God, might justly complain of hardness; and also . . . I have explicat (explained) all such places by the best learned interpreters as either were falsely expounded by some, or else absurdly applied by others; so that by this means both they which have not ability to buy the commentaries upon the New Testament, and they also which have not opportunity and leisure to read them because of their prolixity, may use this book instead thereof.' These notes have in many cases a strong doctrinal bias.

The revision of the Old Testament was begun immediately after the printing of the New, and continued without intermission for two years. The names of the revisers are not all known; but it is certain that Whittingham, Gilly, and Sampson were engaged in it, and they were most probably aided, among others, by Miles Coverdale and John Knox. The Great Bible was the basis, but its text was revised with much care, and brought into closer conformity to the Hebrew. The revisers were manifestly men of competent scholarship and profound Biblical knowledge. They made full use of all available aids. The Latin versions of Leo Juda, Sebastian Münster, and Sanctes Pagninus, and the French translation of Olivetan, as revised by Calvin, were constantly consulted, and many important emendations made from them. In those books originally translated by Tyndale, the text is not much changed (Genesis—2 Chronicles); but in the poetical and prophetic books the changes are so numerous that the translation may be considered new. It is much more literal, and at the same time more forcible, than its predecessors. The Bible was printed at Geneva in the year 1560, at the expense of John Bodley, and it was dedicated to Queen Elizabeth.

The Genevan Bible was far superior to all that preceded it. It is confessedly the best in the English language, with the exception of the Authorized Version. Though never formally 'authorized' for public use in the churches, it soon took the place in public estimation hitherto held by Tyndale's, and retained it for some eighty years, during which period it passed through more than one hundred and fifty editions. The place of its origin, the way in which it rendered ecclesiastical terms, and the tenor of its annotations, endeared it to the hearts of the Puritans of England and Presbyterians of Scotland. It was the first English Bible printed in Roman type.

The New Testament published with the Old in 1560 was different from that of 1557. It was revised by some new hand, and the changes introduced, chiefly from Beza, are not improvements. In the year 1576 another revision of this Testament was published with the following title:—'The New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ, translated out of Greek by Theodore Beza, . . . Englished by L. Tomson.' 'Tomson's New Testament,' says Westcott, 'presents the fullest form of Beza's influence. One peculiarity is characteristic of Tomson alone. In his anxiety to express the emphatic force of the Greek article, he consistently renders it by "that" or "this," and in many cases the effect is almost grotesque. One example will suffice: "He that hath that Son hath that life; and he that hath not that Son hath not that life" (1 Jn. 5.12). But notwithstanding its peculiarities, this Testament became popular, and was generally attached to the Genevan Bible.

THE BISHOPS' BIBLE.—Soon after the accession of Queen Elizabeth, the heads of the English Church, under the leadership of Archbishop Parker, began to consider the propriety of a new version, or revision, of the Bible, which might be authorized by the rulers of church and state, and acceptable to all sects and classes in the country. Parker resolved to divide the Bible into a number of sections, and to portion them out for translation or revision among a select few, whose position in the church, and established character for scholarship, might tend, he supposed, to give their work weight with the public. Each man, on completing his section, was to send it back to the archbishop for final revision, approval, and publication. It appears that, in addition to the archbishop, the following were selected:—Alley, Bishop of Exeter; Davies, Bishop of St. David's; Sandys, Bishop of Worcester; Parkhurst, Bishop of Norwich; Barlow, Bishop of Chichester; Horne, Bishop of Winchester; Bentham, Bishop of Lichfield; Grindal, Bishop of London; Scambler, Bishop of Peterborough; Cox, Bishop of Ely; Bullingham, Bishop of Lincoln; Guest, Bishop of Rochester; Goodman, Dean of Westminster; Pearn, Dean of Ely; and Pierson, Prebendary of Canterbury. Rules were laid down for their guidance—1. 'To follow the common English translation used in the churches, and not to recede from it but where it varieth manifestly from the Hebrew or Greek original. 2. To use sections and divisions in the texts as Pagnine in his translation useth, and for the verity of the Hebrew to follow the said Pagnine and Münster specially, and generally others learned in the tongues. 3. To make no bitter notes upon any text, or yet to set down any determination in places of controversy. 4. To note such chapters and places as contain matter of genealogies, or other such places not edifying, with some strike or note, that the reader may eschew them in his public reading. 5. That all such words as sound in the old translation, to any offence of lightness or obscenity, be expressed with more convenient terms and phrases.' The rules were good, but they do not appear to have been followed strictly; and a plan was pursued by at least one of the revisers calculated to corrupt rather than amend the version. Guest, in returning the Book of Psalms, wrote to Parker:—'Where in the New Testament one piece of a psalm is reported, I translate it in the Psalms according to the translation thereof in the New Testament.' This might have been allowable had the quotations in the New Testament been uniformly made verbatim from the Old, which they are not.

The revision was begun in 1564, and the Bible was published in 1568 in a magnificent folio volume. From the fact that the revisers were nearly all prelates, it is usually called The Bishops' Bible. It was an improvement upon 'The Great Bible,' for it omitted most of the interpolations from the Vulgate, and to some extent amended the text, adopting the best renderings of the Geneva, and giving a number of new and happy translations from the Greek in the New Testament. But as a whole it was not satisfactory, and it disappointed the expectations of the learned. The scholarship of the revisers appears to have been defective, especially in Hebrew. A new edition appeared in 1572, the New Testament portion being still further revised. Still it did not command the confidence of scholars; it did not meet the wants of the church; and it did not gain the affections of the people, who continued to prefer the Geneva. In the year 1571 an ecclesiastical order was issued, that 'every archbishop and bishop should have at his house a copy of the Bible, . . . and that it should be placed in the hall or the large dining-room, that it might be useful to their servants or to strangers.' It was also enjoined that there should be a copy in each cathedral, and as far as possible in all churches.

THE RHEMISH AND DOUAY VERSION.—

The Roman Catholic hierarchy in England, and indeed over Europe, offered the most determined opposition to the translation of the Sacred Scriptures when they found that through the press they could be freely disseminated among the people. Tyndale and all associated with him were ruthlessly persecuted. His Testaments were searched for, seized, and burned by the authorities in England. So late as the year 1530 it was a capital offence even to possess one of them. But when the spread of Reformation principles gave religious liberty to the nation, the Romish hierarchy found themselves unable successfully to oppose the publication of the English version. There was a growing demand for it on the part of the people, and to supply that demand edition after edition issued from the press. Another mode of opposition was therefore adopted. The Protestant versions were charged with being unfaithful. Leading Roman Catholic divines affirmed that they contained deadly heresies, and gave gross misrepresentations of the Divine Word. The English Bible was called 'The Devil's Book,' 'The Gospel of the Devil.' In the year 1580 Robert Parsons, in a little work printed at Douay, entitled 'Reasons why Catholics refuse to go to Church,' says, 'First, the Scripture is read there in false and shameless translations, containing manifest and wilful corruptions to draw it to their own purposes.' In 1581 Cardinal Allen, in his 'Apology for the English Colleges at Rome and Rheims,' speaks of the Bible of Protestants as 'falsely, corruptly, and deceitfully translated.' In 1582 Gregory Martin published, at Rheims, 'A Discovery of the Manifold Corruptions of the Holy Scriptures by the Heretics of our days,' in which he styles the Protestant Bibles, 'Not indeed God's Book, Word, or Scripture, but the Devil's Word.' When these sweeping allegations began to be exposed by men of learning, and called in question by a thoughtful public, the Roman Catholics felt themselves bound to establish their charges by producing a translation of their own. In the year 1568 a number of English Roman Catholics established a college at the town of Douay, in Flanders, for the education of English priests. Some years afterwards, political disturbances having arisen, the college was transferred for a time to Rheims, in France, and there the first Anglo-Romish version of the Bible was commenced. The New Testament was published in 1582 with the following title:—'THE NEW TESTAMENT OF JESUS CHRIST, TRANSLATED FAITHFULLY INTO ENGLISH, out of the Authentical Latin, according to the best corrected copies of the same, diligently conferred with the Greeke and other editions in divers languages. With ARGUMENTS of bookes and chapters, ANNOTATIONS, and other necessarie helpes, for the better understanding of the text, and specially for the discoverie of the CORRUPTIONS of divers late translations, and for clearing the CONTROVERSIES in religion. In the English College of Rheims.'

The men who took the leading part in this translation were the following:—Gregory Martin, an M.A. of Oxford, who went to Douay in 1570, and was ordained priest in 1573. He is said to have translated the whole Bible. He was considered 'the principal linguist of the seminary.' William (afterwards Cardinal) Allen, Richard Bristow, and John Reynolds, who revised the text and prepared the voluminous notes. The New Testament has a lengthened preface, containing a plausible defence of the position taken by the Church of Rome in regard to vernacular translations of the Bible. It is denied that the church ever forbade absolutely such translations; but it is admitted that she claims the sole right of determining who shall be permitted to read, and how the words are to be interpreted. It is stated on the authority of the Council of Trent, 'that the Holy Scriptures, though truly and catholically translated into vulgar tongues, yet may not be indifferently read of all men, nor of any other than such as have express licence thereunto of their lawful ordinaries, with good testimony from their curates or confessors, that they be humble, discreet, and devout persons, and like to take much good and no harm thereby.' The Protestant versions are denounced in the strongest terms. They are styled 'false and impious.' It is said that 'no other books in the world are so pernicious as heretical translations of the Scriptures, poisoning the people under colour of divine authority.'

It is enough to say of the Rheims Version that it contains all the corruptions, errors, and interpolations of the Vulgate. It was not even the Latin text of Jerome which the Rheims translators took as their standard, though it, in Jerome's own opinion, was imperfect; but it was a text which, during a long course of ages, had gradually become more and more corrupt, and which the Council of Trent was forced to acknowledge to be defective. Yet with strange disregard alike of history and criticism, the translators affirm that 'it is not only better than all other Latin translations, but than the Greek text itself, in those places where they disagree.' The language of the Rheims Version is barbarous, many of its words being unintelligible to ordinary readers. The translators were aware of this, and give their reason:—'Continually keeping ourselves as near as is possible to our text and to the very words and phrases which by long use are made venerable, though to some profane or delicate ears they may seem more hard or barbarous.' A few examples will show the character of the version in this respect:—Phi. 2. 7, 'He exinanited himself;' Ga. 5. 4, 'You are evacuated from Christ;' Ep. 6. 12, 'Against the spirituals of wickedness in the celestialis;' 1 Ti. 6. 20, 'O Timothee, keep the depositum;' He. 13. 16, 17, 'And beneficence and communication do not forget: for with such hostes God is promerited. Obey your prelates, and be subject to them;' 1 Co. 5. 7, 'Purge the old leaven, that you may be a new paste, as you are aymes. For our Pasche, Christ, is immolated.' What possible meaning could ordinary readers extract from such language? It is only too evident that the version was made rather to cloak than unfold the sense of God's Word. And this is not the worst feature. Many single terms are so rendered, and many sentences so construed, as to pervert the plain meaning for party purposes, and to give a colouring of authority to false dogmas. Take the following examples:—He. 11. 21, 'By faith, Jacob dying, blessed every one of the sons of Joseph, and adored the top of his rod.' The note to this passage is in the same spirit:—'Observe in these words, He adored the top of his rod, that adoration may be done to creatures, or to God at and before a creature. . . . Now at or before the crucifix, relics, images. . . . By all which it is evident, that it is false which the Calvinists teach, that we may not adore image, crucifix, or any visible creature, &c.' Rev. 2. 21, 'And I gave her time that she might do penance.' Lu. 17. 14, 'Go, show yourselves to the priests,' on which is the following comment:—'This leprosy signifieth sin, which though God may and can heal without any man's means, yet he doth it not ordinarily but by the priest's ministry; therefore let no man despise God's ordinance, nor say that it is enough to confess to God though he never come at the priest.' In the note on 1 Ti. 5. 15 it is said:— 'We may here learn, that for those to marry which are professed (i.e. who had taken the vow of celibacy) is to turn back after Satan. For he speaketh of such as were married contrary to their vow. And hereupon we call the religious that marry (as Luther, Bucer, Peter Martyr, and the rest) apostates.' On Mat. 13. 29 it is said:— 'Where ill men (be they heretics or other malefactors) may be punished or suppressed without disturbance and hazard of the good, they may and ought by public authority either spiritual or temporal to be chastised or executed.' A note of like character is found on Lu. 9. 55:— 'Not justice, nor all rigorous punishment of sinners is here forbidden, nor the Church or Christian princes blamed for putting heretics to death. . . . Therefore Saint Peter used his power upon Ananias and Sapphira, when he struck them both down to death for defrauding the Church.' On 1 Co. 13. 3 it is said:— 'Believe assuredly and hold for certain, that no heretic and schismatic that uniteth not himself to the Catholic Church again, how great almes soever he give, yea or shed his blood for Christ's name, can possibly be saved.' It will be manifest to every thoughtful reader that one great object the Romish Church had in view in preparing this singular translation, and writing these dreadful notes, was to propagate the pernicious dogmas, and to endeavour to defend the persecuting principles of Popery. The comments have been well described as 'a mass of bigotry, sophistry, and unfairness.'

The preface to the Rhemish Testament commences with the statement that the Bible had been long since translated by the Roman Catholics, and that 'the Old Testament' was still 'lying by for lack of good means to publish the whole in such sort as a work of so great charge and importance requireth.' It so remained for twenty-seven years. At length, in 1609, the first volume of the Old Testament was printed at Douay, and in the following year the second and concluding volume. The translation and notes are similar in character and spirit to those of the New Testament. The translators were probably the same who prepared the New Testament; and the annotations are said to be the work of Thomas Worthington, president of the English College of Douay. They are much less copious than those of the New Testament. A second edition of the Bible appeared at Rouen in 1635; but no other edition of the Douay Bible was published for the space of a hundred and fifteen years. The New Testament was republished in 1600, 1621, 1633, and again in 1738.

KING JAMES' VERSION.—Soon after the accession of James I. to the throne of England, a conference of the leading clergy was held at Hampton Court (January, 1604) 'for the determining of things pretending to be amiss in the Church.' It was there moved by Dr. Reynolds, president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, that a new version of the Bible should be prepared, as those which were allowed in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. were corrupt. The king approved of the motion; and a few months afterwards, upon the advice of the bishops, nominated a body of fifty-four translators. The list was completed and ratified on the 30th of June, 1604. The nominations appear to have been made solely on the ground of eminent qualifications for the task. The men selected were among the first scholars in England. Yet, it so happened, that all shades of opinion and ecclesiastical polity were represented. The High Church party had Andrews, Bishop of Winchester; Barlow, Bishop of Lincoln; and Ravis, Bishop of London. The clergy of Puritan tendency were represented by Reynolds of Oxford, and Chaderton and Lively of Cambridge; while the learned, independent of party, were represented by such men as Sir Henry Saville, and Saravia, Prebendary of Westminster. Canon Westcott's estimate of the staff is just:— 'Of these scholars many (as Andrews, Overall, Saville, and Reynolds) have obtained an enduring reputation apart from this common work in which they were associated. Others, whose names are less familiar, were distinguished for special acquirements requisite for their task. Lively, Spalding, King, and Byng were successively professors of Hebrew at Cambridge, and Hardinge and Kilbye at Oxford. Harmer and Perin were professors of Greek at Oxford, and Downes at Cambridge. Bedwell was the most distinguished Arabic scholar of the time. Saravia was an accomplished modern linguist. Thompson, Chaderton, Smith, and Bois were equally distinguished for their knowledge of ancient languages.' The competency of such men for the work assigned to them no scholar will question. Had the critical apparatus we now possess been in their hands, so as to enable them to elaborate a pure Hebrew and Greek text, and to apply to its elucidation all the resources of grammar and philology, ere they proceeded to revise the English, we should have inherited from them a version which probably never could have been surpassed. In addition to scholarship they had another indispensable qualification—they were deeply imbued with the spirit of the sacred writers.

Of the fifty-four originally nominated only forty-seven entered upon the work. They were arranged in six classes, and appointed to sit—two classes at Westminster, two at Oxford, and two at Cambridge; and the books of the Bible were apportioned among them as follows:—

I. Westminster, Hebrew—Andrews, Bishop of Winchester, president, with nine others,—Genesis to 2 Kings.

II. Westminster, Greek,—Barlow, Bishop of London, president, with six others,—the Epistles.

III. Cambridge, Hebrew,—Lively, Prof. of Hebrew, president, with seven others,—1 Chronicles to Ecclesiastes.

IV. Cambridge, Greek,—Dupont, president, with six others,—the Apocrypha.

V. Oxford, Hebrew,—Hardinge, Prof. of Hebrew, president, with six others,—Isaiah to Malachi.

VI. Oxford, Greek,—Ravis, Bishop of London, president, with seven others,—Gospels, Acts, and Revelation.

A code of rules, in substance as follows, was laid down for their guidance:—

1. The Bishops' Bible to be followed, and as little altered as the truth of the original will permit.
2. The proper names to be retained, as nigh as may be, according as they were vulgarly used.
3. The old ecclesiastical words to be kept, viz. the word church not to be translated congregation, &c.
4. When a word hath divers significations, that to be kept which hath been most commonly used by the most ancient of the fathers, being agreeable to the propriety of the place and the analogy of the faith.
5. The division of the chapters to be altered either not at all, or as little as may be.
6. No marginal notes to be affixed, but only for the explanation of Hebrew and Greek words.
7. Such quotations of places to be marginally set down as shall serve for the fit references of one scripture to another.

8. Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters, and having translated or amended them severally by himself, where he thinketh good, all to meet together, confer what they have done, and agree for their parts what shall stand.

9. As any one company hath despatched any one book in this manner, they shall send it to the rest to be considered.

10. If any company upon the revision of the book so sent doubt or differ upon any place, to send them word thereof, note the place, and send the reasons; to which if they consent not, the difference to be compounded at the general meeting, which is to be of the chief persons of each company, at the end of the work.

11. When any place of special obscurity is doubted of, letters to be directed by authority to send to any learned man in the land for his judgment of such a place.

12. Letters to be sent from every bishop to the rest of his clergy, admonishing them of this translation, and to move as many as, being skilful in the tongues, to send their particular observations to one of the companies.

13. The directors in each company to be—the Deans of Westminster and Chester in that place, and the king's professors in Hebrew and Greek in either university.

14. These translations to be used when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible, viz. Tyndale's, Matthew's, Coverdale's, Whitchurch's, Geneva.

15. Besides the said directors, three or four of the most ancient and grave divines in either of the universities, not employed in translating, to be assigned by the vice-chancellor, upon conference with the rest of the heads, to be overseers of the translations as well Hebrew as Greek, for the better observation of the fourth rule.

All arrangements were completed in 1604, and many of those nominated appear to have entered privately upon their duties; but the classes were not called together, and the formal work of translation and revision was not commenced till 1607, and it was not finished till 1610. In the latter year three copies of the entire Scriptures, revised in accordance with the rules, were furnished—one by Westminster, one by Oxford, and one by Cambridge, and sent to Stationers' Hall. There a revision-committee, composed of one member from each class, reviewed and corrected the copies, and prepared them for the press. Nine months were spent in this work, each member of committee receiving a small weekly pension. The manuscript was then handed to Dr. Smith, who, aided by Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, gave it a final examination and corrected the proofs. Smith was a profound Oriental scholar, and discharged his onerous and responsible duties with singular ability and faithfulness. He also wrote the preface, and has given in it, after a brief history and defence of former English versions, a very clear and satisfactory account of the labours of the translators. Though quaint and pedantic, this preface throws much light on some of the peculiarities of our version. The Bible was printed in 1611 with the following title:— 'The Holy Bible, containing the Old Testament and the New. Newly translated out of the original tongues; and with the former Translations diligently compared and revised, by his Majesty's special commandment. Appointed to be read in Churches.' It was a folio volume, printed in black-letter by Robert Barker, London.

The manner in which the version was prepared, and the materials used in its preparation, must always be subjects of special interest to the student of Biblical literature and to the general public in these lands. These are indicated with considerable minuteness in the preface, and what is wanting there may be gleaned from other authentic sources. Dr. Smith says:— 'Truly we never thought from the beginning that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make a bad one a good one, but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against; that hath been our endeavour, that our mark. To that purpose there were many chosen that were greater in other men's eyes than in their own, and that sought the truth rather than their own praise.' The translators then acknowledge the general faithfulness and substantial accuracy of the versions of Tyndale and Coverdale, and of the revised editions put forth by the Geneva exiles and the English bishops. They had in these a solid basis; and their task was to examine, collate, and critically revise, so as to bring the version into closer and fuller conformity with the originals. Of their competency for this task Dr. Smith says: 'They came, or were thought to come to the work . . . learned, not to learn. . . . And in what sort did these assemble? In the trust of their own knowledge, or of their sharpness of wit, or deepness of judgment, as it were in an arm of flesh? At no hand. They trusted in Him that hath the key of David, opening and no man shutting: they prayed to the Lord, the Father of our Lord, to the effect that St. Augustine did: O let Thy Scriptures be my pure delight; let me not be deceived in them, neither let me deceive by them. In this confidence, and with this devotion, did they assemble together; not too many, lest one should trouble another; and yet many, lest many things haply might escape them.' The care and research they exercised is thus shown:— 'If you ask what they had before them, truly it was the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, the Greek of the New. . . . These tongues we set before us to translate, being the tongues wherein God was pleased to speak to his church by his prophets and apostles. Neither did we run over the work with that posting haste that the Septuagint did, if that be true which is reported of them, that they finished it in seventy-two days; neither were we barred or hindered from going over it again, having once done it. . . . Neither, to be short, were we the first that fell in hand with translating the Scripture into English, and consequently destitute of former helps. . . . None of these things. The work hath not been huddled up in seventy-two days, but hath cost the workmen, as light as it seemeth, the pains of twice seven times seventy-two days and more. Matters of such weight and consequence are to be speeded with maturity; for in a business of moment a man feareth not the blame of convenient slackness.' The time spent upon it was seven years. Three (1604-7) were occupied in preliminary arrangements and individual research on the part of the fifty-four scholars appointed, and numerous others whom they consulted. Three years more were taken up in the systematic united work of the six classes. Each man in each class translated all the books intrusted to his class; then the whole class met, and after thorough revision adopted a common text; then that text was in succession sent to each of the other classes for examination; then the whole was submitted to the final revision of six elected delegates, one from each class, representing the Hebrew and Greek scholars respectively, together with six consulting assistants. The manuscript was finally placed in the skilful hands of Dr. Smith, who passed it through the press, revising the proofs. A more complete system could scarcely have been invented.

The translators did not confine their attention to the English, nor to modern versions: 'Neither did we think much,' says Dr. Smith, 'to consult the translators or commentators, Chaldee, Hebrew, Syrian, Greek, or Latin,—no, nor the Spanish, French, Italian, or Dutch. Neither did we disdain to revise that which we had done, and to bring back to the anvil that which we had hammered; but having and using as great helps as were needful, and fearing no reproach for slowness, nor coveting praise for expedition, we have at the length, through the good hand of the Lord upon us, brought the work to that pass that you see.' A critical examination of the Authorized Version, and a comparison of it with the previous English and other translations, prove the truth of Dr. Smith's words. Every verse appears to have been weighed with scrupulous care, and whatever tended to make the translation more literal, more plain, more terse and forcible, was adopted. The original texts were always the final standards of appeal; but in seeking the real sense, assistance from all quarters—from versions ancient and modern—was made use of; and in expressing that sense in vigorous, idiomatic English, words and phrases were freely taken from others. Even the Rhemish Version of the New Testament supplied a number of expressive words of Latin origin, and a few happy renderings. The Geneva version was largely drawn upon. 'The chief influence of the Rhemish Version,' says Canon Westcott, 'was upon the vocabulary of the revisers, that of the Geneva version upon the interpretation.' In the Old Testament the Antwerp Polyglott, published 1569-72, rendered essential service, especially its sixth volume, which contains the very accurate interlinear Latin translation of the Hebrew text by Arias Montanus. The Latin Version of the Old Testament and Apocrypha, published a few years later (1579) by Tremellius and Junius, was also consulted, and furnished some excellent renderings. For faithfulness and perspicuity this version has never been surpassed. The Latin translation of Castalio, begun at Geneva in 1542, finished at Basle in 1550, and published in 1551, was likewise used, as was that which bears the name of Leo Juda (Tiguri, 1543). Dr. Smith mentions the Spanish, French, Italian, and German as having been consulted. He doubtless refers to the Spanish of Cassiodore de Reyna, printed at Basle in 1569; to the French of Olivetan, revised by Calvin, and afterwards more fully by the College of Pastors and Professors at Geneva, and published in 1588; to the Italian of Diodati, translated at Geneva, and published in 1607; and to the German of Luther, and Swiss-German, published at Zurich, under the care of Leo Juda, in 1529. In the New Testament the admirable Latin Version of Beza, first published by Robert Stephen at Geneva, in 1556, was used in bringing out the more delicate shades of meaning, which previous English translators had sometimes overlooked. Not only was the sense of the divine originals faithfully studied, but the selection of words and phrases, and the structure and rhythm of sentences best calculated to give force and beauty to the version, were watched with the most scrupulous care. Every clause, indeed every word, was anxiously weighed, and no point was considered too minute for the keen critical eyes of the laborious and conscientious revisers. The marginal readings, and the difference in type (now represented by our italics), which showed words inserted for explanation, and which had no direct representatives in the Hebrew or Greek, make it clear how anxious the authors were to bring the reader as far as possible into contact with the very letter of the inspired original. Of the marginal readings, Dr. Smith says in the preface: 'Some peradventure would have no variety of senses to be set in the margin, lest the authority of Scripture for deciding of controversies by the show of uncertainty, should somewhat be shaken. But we hold their judgment not to be so sound in this point. For though whatsoever things are necessary are manifest, . . . yet for all that it cannot be dissembled, that partly to exercise and whet our wits, . . . partly to stir up our devotion to crave the assistance of God's Spirit by prayer, . . . it hath pleased God . . . here and there to scatter words and sentences of that difficulty and doubtfulness, not in doctrinal points that concern salvation, but in matters of lesser moment, that fearfulness would better beseech us than confidence. . . . There be many words in Scripture which be never found there but once, so that we cannot be helped by conference of places. Again, there be many rare names of certain birds, beasts, and precious stones, &c., concerning which the Hebrews themselves are so divided among themselves for judgment, that they may seem to have defined this or that, rather because they would say something, than because they were sure of that which they said. . . . Now in such case doth not a margin do well to admonish to seek further, and not to conclude or dogmatize on this or that peremptorily? For as it is a fault of incredulity to doubt of those things that are evident; so to determine of such things as the Spirit of God hath left (even in the judgment of the judicious) questionable, can be no less than presumption.' Here we have the true spirit of sanctified scholarship—a spirit that should ever guide the Biblical student, stimulating him to ever-increased research, and restraining him from dogmatism.

One other point is noticed in the preface, and may occasionally be observed in the version, in which, in my opinion, the authors did not show their usual soundness of judgment: 'We have not tied ourselves to an uniformity of phrasing, or to an identity of words, as some peradventure would wish that we had done.' In fact they have, in not a few places, obscured the sense by giving a different rendering in different passages to words that are the same in the original. The Epistles of Paul afford many examples. In Ro. iv. one Greek word is translated 'count,' 'impute,' 'reckon,' and the force and precision of the apostle's reasoning is thereby to some extent lost. So in the book of Psalms the same Hebrew word is translated in one place 'grave,' in another 'hell;' and yet it means neither the one nor the other.

Though the version was prepared under the sanction of royalty, and by the leading members of the Church of England, it does not appear that it was ever formally authorized by council, convocation, or parliament. The Great Bible was authorized by a special proclamation of Henry VIII. The Bishops' Bible, being only a revision of the preceding, inherited, as it were, its title; and as King James' Version was intended to take the place of the Bishops', and in fact did so, it may be regarded as indirectly authorized. But it did not at once supersede all others, for though no edition of the Bishops' Bible was published subsequent to 1611, the Geneva continued for a considerable time to retain its place in the affections of the English people; editions of it were printed as late as 1644. Every effort was used, however, to gain popularity for the new version. It was printed in the same form, and illustrated with the same woodcuts as the Geneva; and it was only by an examination of the text that the one could be distinguished from the other.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.

There are some slight differences between our modern authorized version and that published in 1611, a few of which it may be well to note:—

| 1611. | MODERN. |
|--|---|
| 1 Jn. 5. 12, 'He that hath not the Son hath not life.' | 'He that hath not the Son o , God hath not life.' |
| Mat. 12. 23, 'Is this the Son of David?' | 'Is not this the Son of David?' |
| Ep. 2. 13, 'But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off.' | 'But now in Christ Jesus ye who some time were far off.' |
| 1 Ti. 1. 4, 'Which minister questions rather than edifying.' | 'Which minister questions rather than godly edifying.' |
| Ro. 12. 2, 'That acceptable.' | ' And acceptable.' |
| He. 12. 1, 'Run with patience unto the race.' | 'Run with patience the race.' |

Besides verbal changes such as the above, the spelling and punctuation have been greatly altered, the italics have been revised, and the headings of chapters and of pages considerably modified. Sometimes the changes made were not improvements, yet on the whole they have tended to adapt the version to the English-speaking people of the present day. There are still some old words retained which I fear are not generally understood by ordinary readers, and for which modern words might with advantage be substituted. For example: Job 18. 19, 'He shall neither have son nor nephew;' it should be 'son's son.' Nephew in old English was equivalent to the French neveu and Latin nepos, a 'grandson.' Ge. 45. 6, 'There shall neither be earing nor harvest.' Earing is the old Anglo-Saxon eriung, 'ploughing.' So De. 21. 4, 'A rough valley which is neither eared nor sown;' and Is. 30. 24, 'The young asses that ear the ground.' Ear comes from the Latin arare, 'to plough.' It was a common word when the version was made; now it is obsolete. 2 Ch. 21. 20, it is said of the death of Jehoram, 'he departed without being desired.' The sense is 'regretted;' the word desire was from the Latin desiderare, and was formerly understood in the sense of 'regret.' Ex. 28. 8, 'The curious girdle of the ephod.' The word did not signify, as now, 'odd' or 'strange,' but, like the Latin curiosus, 'wrought with care.' 2 Th. 2. 7, 'He who now letteth will let.' Let here signifies 'to hinder,' from the Anglo-Saxon lettan. Ac. 17. 5, 'Certain lewd fellows,' i.e. some of 'the common people,' 'the mob,' from the Anglo-Saxon leode, German leute, 'people.' 1 Ti. 2. 9, 'That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety.' This is a corruption; the earliest editions read shamefastnesse, which is an expressive old word formed like steadfastness. Ge. 14. 23, 'Shoe-latchet,' from the French lacet, the 'lace' of a shoe. Mar. 9. 6, 'He wist not what to say;' he knew not, from the Anglo-Saxon witan, the same as the German wissen. 1 Co. 8. 1, 'We do you to wit of the grace of God;' wit here comes from the same root, hence the meaning is, 'We cause you to know.' Ac. 21. 15, 'We took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.' The word means 'baggage,' something requiring to be carried.

As a whole, however, our English Version is admirable. The facts which I have narrated show at what an extraordinary cost of time, labour, and scholarship it has been produced. It is the result of nearly a century of toil and research. During that long period the work not only occupied the attention of the ripest scholars in England, but it was aided, directly or indirectly, by the greatest Biblical critics in Europe. Its history, when known, cannot fail to infuse into the mind a deeper veneration for it, and a fuller confidence in its faithfulness. There is a romance in some of the incidents of its long story which fix them indelibly on the memory, and endear the Bible itself to the heart of the Christian. The men who laid the foundations of our Bible were thoroughly in earnest. They were moved to their work and sustained in it by a higher than human power. Hardships, persecution, exile, death itself, could not shake their firm resolve to give to their country the pure Word of God. 'Tyndale, who gave us our first New Testament from the Greek, was strangled for his work at Vilvorde. Coverdale, who gave us our first printed Bible, narrowly escaped the stake by exile; Rogers, to whom we owe the multiform basis of our present version, was the first victim of the Marian persecution; Cranmer, who has left us our Psalter, was at last blessed with a death of triumphant agony. The work was crowned by martyrdom, and the workmen laboured at it in the faith and with the love of martyrs.' And in a spirit worthy of their sainted predecessors, the authors of the Authorized Version introduced the finished work to their readers:—'It remaineth that we commend thee to God, and to the Spirit of his grace, which is able to build farther than we can ask or think. He removeth the scales from our eyes, the vail from our hearts, opening our wits that we may understand his Word, enlarging our hearts, yea correcting our affections, that we may love it above gold and silver, yea that we may love it to the end. O receive not so great things in vain; O despise not so great salvation.'

Our version has many noble qualities. In the simplicity and chasteness of its style, combined with general dignity and vigour of expression, it has never been equalled. It has all the Saxon purity of the classic age of English literature. It has become as it were a part of the national mind. Its pithy sentiments and pointed proverbs, its happy turns of expression and noble figures, are upon every lip. It has entered into the very hearts of the people. It is interwoven with all that is noblest and purest in our national literature. And, what is of importance in these days, it forms the one link of union between different sects, and it contributes to bind us together as a Protestant nation by a tie which even the strife of party and the war of politics cannot sever. Its blemishes, too, numerous as we admit them to be, change no fact, alter no precept, obscure no doctrine. They slightly mar the surface, and this with delicate hand we might remedy; but they do not mar the exquisite symmetry nor touch the solid foundation of Revealed Truth.

GENUINENESS, AUTHENTICITY, INSPIRATION, PRESERVATION AND VALUE

OF THE WORD OF GOD.

THE SACRED VOLUME, usually called THE BIBLE or THE BOOK by way of eminence, consists of two parts, the Old Testament and the New Testament. It contains a great variety of different compositions, embracing sixty-six smaller volumes comprising historical narratives, laws, ordinances, poetry, doctrines, moral and religious precepts written by different persons widely separated from each other in place and time. More than fifteen hundred years elapsed while the authors of these peculiar productions were engaged in writing them. Even in a literary aspect the Sacred Scriptures form the most remarkable book which the world has ever seen. Of all writings they are the most ancient. The events which they record are of the most profound interest. The wisest and best of men have borne witness to their efficacy as an instrument of enlightenment and purification. The Bible opens to us the mystery of creation, which would for ever remain an insoluble problem only for the light which shines from the Word of God. It reveals the character of God, and it is the only book in which a full and faithful portraiture can be found of the nature and condition of man. It reveals man's immortality and the end for which he was created. It deals with the origin of evil, and the inseparable connection between sin and misery. It explains the principles on which the Ruler of the Universe is governing the world, and while it depicts the vanity of the present life, it sets forth the glory which is reserved in a future scene for the pious faithful servants of God. In no other volume have we such close and accurate statements given of the secret workings of the human heart, and so minute and comprehensive details of the moral disease which affects the race of man. The divine origin of the Book is thus attested, because it shows that the Creator, who formed man in his own image, and who knew all the elements of sin and misery into which man fell by transgression, has here depicted, as God alone could do, the results of the Fall. What the sacred volume thus states man everywhere recognizes as true, and it is only in the Bible that a plan of restoration is set forth worthy of the character of God and suitable to all the necessities of man.

Now, the Bible expressly and repeatedly claims to be THE WORD OF GOD, the only and complete Revelation of Divine Will. It is affirmed that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16. But it must be obvious that the Bible could not be effectually profitable for these great ends, nor could it make the man of God perfect, if it were not perfect itself. If its different books or sections were at variance with each other, if the doctrines revealed and the moral duties enjoined were not substantially the same throughout, if its teachings were dishonoring to God and his righteous law, or tolerant of impurity and disobedience in man, and if all the parts of the volume were not in harmony, were not in accordance with fact and did not concur in the plan of the whole,—it is obvious that such a claim could not be sustained.

That it is possible for the Creator to make his will known to his intelligent creatures by direct revelations must be admitted. The deep degradation of the heathen in all ages and in all lands, the utter uncertainty and darkness in which the most eminent pagan philosophers have found themselves respecting God, eternity, the state of the soul and the realities of a future life, the dismal confusion in which the human mind must ever remain on the subject of pardon and reconciliation, and the distressing mystery which everywhere appears in Providence if the mind and purpose of God be not revealed,—unite in showing how essential to the well-being of man it is that his will should so be made known.

The original languages of the Bible are Hebrew, Chaldee and Greek. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, excepting a few portions which, from particular circumstances, were in the cognate Chaldee dialect. The learned reader will find this dialect in Dan. ii. 4; vii. 28; Ezra iv. 8; vi. 18; vii. 12–26. The books of Moses exist in two forms. Besides the ordinary Hebrew text, there is also the Samaritan Pentateuch, which was in use among the mixed population who inhabited the kingdom of Israel after its conquest by the Assyrians, composed of the poorer classes left in the country by Shalmaneser, and of the heathen colonists who were introduced by him (2 Kings xvii. 24–41), and who, in consequence of their political hostility to the Jews, acknowledged only the writings of Moses. The date at which the Hebrew-Samaritan text had its origin is uncertain, it being ascribed by some to a period shortly after the division of the two kingdoms, and by others to a date subsequent to the Assyrian captivity. This text, though inferior in value to the Hebrew, is useful as affording confirmation of it from an independent authority.

All the authors of the New Testament appear to have written in the Greek language. That this tongue was already familiar to them as a vehicle of their religious thoughts and feelings is evident from their frequent use of the Greek translation, called the Septuagint, in quoting the Old Testament, and from the REMARKABLE accordance of their style with the style of that ancient and precious version. This language was also peculiarly suitable for this important purpose, because at that time it was almost universally known and very generally used in the most civilized parts of the world.

GENUINENESS.—That the different books of the Old and New Testament are GENUINE—that is, were written by the persons whose names they bear—we have the most satisfactory evidence; and we have no more reason to doubt the fact than we have to question the authorship of Herodotus, Xenophon, Livy or Tacitus. For,

1. The books of the Old Testament have always been received as genuine by the Jews from the earliest period to the present time. In addition to the fact that the older books have been referred to by subsequent sacred writers, we have the strongest evidence afforded of the genuineness of the Old Testament by Jewish translators and writers, such as the translators of the Septuagint and others. On the other hand, a numerous succession of Christian writers have quoted or alluded to very many passages of the New Testament from the times of the Apostles to the present day. Indeed, in the early ages, when evidence was available, the genuineness of the books of the New Testament was not questioned by the heathen adversaries or heretics.

2. The language and style of the books of the Old and New Testaments prove them to have been written at different times and by different authors. Thus the Pentateuch, which is extremely simple and contains words of undoubted Egyptian origin, bears internal evidence of its age and authorship, while in the books of Esther, Ezra and Nehemiah the proper names and the occurrence of Chaldee and Persian words show their date to be later than the Babylonish Captivity, while the Greek in which the New Testament is written is mingled with words and expressions which are Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac and Latin in their character—a style which only accords with the time, the situation and the circumstances of the writers to whom the different books of the Christian Scriptures are ascribed.

3. The moral impossibility of their being forgeries is quite apparent. If the OLD TESTAMENT books be forgeries, they must have been written by Jews, Gentiles or Christians. But the Gentiles were ignorant of the history and religious rites and economy of the Jews, who would never have received and sanctioned the works of their enemies. Christians could not have written them, for many centuries before the Advent they had been the recognized authority in the Jewish civil and ecclesiastical polity. The Jews would not have forged such a system of costly religious services, and such a record of crimes, idolatries and deserved chastisements, as the historical books contain. Then, as to the NEW TESTAMENT, the Jews were violent enemies of Christianity; they put its Founder to death, and the apostles and disciples were persecuted alike by Jew and Gentile, who would equally have detected any forgeries that commended the religion which they opposed. So also the genuineness of the Epistles addressed to the early churches was capable of demonstration at the time, and it would have been impossible for church after church to have been led to receive these Epistles and other writings, if they had not possessed indubitable evidence that they were really what they professed to be; and thus, if these books are not to be received, all other ancient writings in the world must be rejected as spurious.

AUTHENTICITY.—It is no less certain that the Sacred Writings are AUTHENTIC, that is, they relate matters of fact, and consequently they are entitled to credit and may claim the greatest authority. For,

1. The writers had the best means of information. Generally they lived among the scenes which they described, and their authority for the events which they did not see was of an indubitable character. Thus it was with Moses, Joshua, Samuel, Ezra, Nehemiah and the Prophets, and the same principle applies to the Evangelists and the writers of the New Testament.

2. As they were not ignorant, so the sacred writers neither did nor could deceive others. Collusion was impossible. They were so far separated in time and place that they had no means to carry out a system of forgery and fraud. The exode from Egypt, the wanderings and scenes in the wilderness, and the great facts of Jewish history, were such that nothing could induce a whole people, and the people in neighboring lands, to receive the facts of the Old Testament history as true if they had not occurred. The New Testament condemns falsehood and deception. If, then, the writers of the New Testament books were not honest, their conduct is inexplicable. Their religion exposed them to suffering and death, and yet they held steadfastly to the facts which they recorded, and thus they would present the appearance of men encountering suffering in the maintenance of that which they knew to be false, and by immoral means attempting to establish the purest religion which the world has ever known.

3. Such multitudes of incidents and allusions to persons, times, events and places are found in both Old and New Testaments, that it must be obvious no writers except honest men, who recorded facts, would venture so to commit themselves. Forgers keep clear of such allusions, and false witnesses know the difficulty of framing a consistent story where many supposed facts have to appear. Besides, the great national institutions of the Jews were associated with the most celebrated incidents of their history. Thus the rite of Circumcision, the Passover, the feasts of Tabernacles and of Pentecost could never have been associated in the life of the nation, as they were, with great historical events, if these events had never occurred. And so also, the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper under the Christian dispensation, perpetuate the memory and demonstrate the truth of the facts in the Gospel history; for men in different lands never could have successfully united to perpetuate a system of falsehood by such ordinances, if Christ had not lived, wrought miracles, died and rose from the dead; while it is incredible that posterity would have been led, by a continued observance of such rites, to receive as true what all their ancestors had declared to be false.

INSPIRATION.—But further, the Scriptures are not merely entitled to be received as Authentic, Genuine and Credible, but as containing the will of God revealed to man as an infallible rule of faith and religious truth, or, in other words, as DIVINELY INSPIRED.

To use the language of a judicious expositor, by the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures we mean “such a complete and immediate communication by the Holy Spirit to the minds of the sacred writers, of those things which could not have been otherwise known, and such an effectual superintendence as to those particulars concerning which they might otherwise obtain information, as sufficed absolutely to preserve them from any error in all things which could in the least affect any of the doctrines or precepts contained in their writings. They wrote, indeed, in such language as their different talents, education, habits and associations suggested or rendered natural to them; but the Holy Spirit so entirely superintended them, when writing, as to exclude every improper expression, and to guide them to all those which best suited their several subjects.” They are the voice, but the Divine Spirit is the SPEAKER. In this view, every sentence must be considered as “the sure testimony of God,” in that sense in which it is proposed as truth. Facts are recorded, and words are given, as they were spoken; but the morality of the words and actions must be judged of by the doctrinal and preceptive parts of the same book.

Now, that the Sacred Scriptures are inspired, we have abundant evidence which amounts to a moral demonstration. For,

1. The writers themselves expressly claim Divine inspiration, and openly assert that the Scriptures are the Word of God. The Old Testament prophets unhesitatingly speak of themselves and of their predecessors as declaring the word of God. They do not utter their teachings for review and criticism, but for their adoption. Their language is, Thus saith the LORD, and thus they demand assent and obedience. So also the writers of the New Testament speak of the prophets of the Old Testament "as holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Our Saviour fully recognizes the Old Testament as the Word of God and possessing Divine authority, while the writers of the New Testament claim attention to their own instructions as the Word of God. Now, as the veracity of the writers must be admitted, it follows that the Scriptures are inspired and infallible. For if the writers of the Old and New Testaments were wise men, they could not have been so deceived as to believe that they, their predecessors and contemporaries, were inspired, if such had not been the case. If they were good men, they could not have acted the part of deceivers, and bad men would not, if they could, have written such books, in which the wicked are so clearly condemned; and it therefore follows incontrovertibly that the Sacred Scriptures are infallible because they are inspired.

2. The matter contained in the Bible requires a Divine inspiration. Passing by the purity and elevation of doctrine, the prediction of future events, and admitting, as must be conceded, the veracity of the writers, there is much in the Scriptures which could only have been known by man on the authority of God. The facts connected with the Creation, and many incidents detailed respecting the Deluge, could have been known by God alone. Then, again, the mysteries of the Trinity, the nature and perfections of God, the Covenant of Grace, the Incarnation and the provisions for redemption by means of atonement, the results as enjoyed in justification, adoption and sanctification, the office of the Comforter, the Mediatorial Headship of the Saviour, and the other doctrines which make up the Theology of Scripture, are such that God only could reveal. This is the only system of doctrine that meets all man's legal and moral wants, satisfies reason and conscience, sustains the soul in prospect of the future life, while it honors God by a full recognition of his sovereignty, his holiness and righteousness; and thus its very perfection shows that the mind which conceived and revealed it must be Divine. It is true there are mysteries in the Bible, and there are mysteries in Nature also. Both are from the same author, and in Nature and revelation the finite can never come into communion with the infinite without recognizing the fact that clouds and darkness must ever surround the throne of the Eternal, and that the infinitude of God cannot be fully comprehended in all its relations by the feeble grasp of man. It would be a just ground of suspicion, if in a Revelation which professed to treat of the Being, Nature and purposes of the Eternal, there were no matters which were not above the level of the ordinary powers of finite creatures.

In the Scriptures only, and in such books as make the Bible their basis, can a delineation of the character of God be found which comprises all excellence; while his laws, ordinances, works and dispensations are set forth as clothed with purity, justice, truth and goodness. So also while man's moral condition is faithfully portrayed, the remedy which the Scriptures reveal for our diseases is worthy of the character of an infinitely righteous Governor of the universe, and adequate to all our wants. Now, these things were written at a time when all the rest of the world were sunk in the grossest ignorance of God and religion, were worshiping idols and living in abominable vices. Several heathen nations had made great attainments in the arts and sciences, but they utterly failed to realize the character of God and of a holy, spiritual religion. That the Jews and the early Christians, who were comparatively rude and backward in philosophy and literature, should have attained to such clear ideas as they possessed respecting the Divine Being, his government, and everything relative to holiness and moral purity, can only be explained by the fact that the Books in which these things were taught were, as they claimed to be, a direct Inspired Revelation from God.

Then, again, the different books of the Bible were written in different ages and countries, by men of different ranks and classes—by shepherds, fishermen, priests, warriors, statesmen, kings and others—and yet all the books have one great object. Amid numerous diversities of form, style and mode of thought, they are pervaded by the same ideas, which are gradually developed, without real contradictions, yet with such circumstantial variations as disprove all possibility of collusion, and show conclusively that one mind, through more than fifteen hundred years, must have used these writers to produce such a perfect system of progressive and harmonious truth.

It pertains to Omniscience alone to foresee and foretell the future. Hence PROPHECY is a perpetual miracle, as one event after another is accomplished which had been predicted in past ages. Almost every historical passage of the Bible is a narrative of something antecedently foretold, and the New Testament is little else than a relation of the fulfillment of the predictions and types of the Old Testament relative to the Messiah and his Church. The latest of these prophecies were delivered seventeen hundred years ago, and some of them are three thousand years old. Their fulfillment is literal and obvious. Shem and Japheth are "ruling" and "enlarged," and the descendants of Ham are still "the servants of servants." Ishmael has "multiplied," but the family of Esau has been "cut off for ever." The sceptre has "departed from Judah," and yet the Jews are alone as a people and not incorporated with other nations. Nineveh is completely destroyed, and Babylon has been swept with the besom of destruction and made a possession "for the bittern and pools of water," "a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment and hissing, without an inhabitant." Tyre has become a place "for fishers to spread their nets upon;" Egypt, "a bare kingdom;" and the fate of the four great monarchies was so literally foretold that the history of their fate is merely an expansion of the prophecy. So in the New Testament the grand apostasy from the Christian faith was predicted, and the fate of the seven Asiatic churches was set forth in terms as definite and clear as if the prophecy had actually been written after their fall and ruin.

The Divine mission of the prophets and inspired writers has also been authenticated by the wondrous MIRACLES which God enabled them to perform; thus attesting to the world that they were His messengers. These miracles were cognizable by the senses, performed in the presence of multitudes, and often were commemorated by special ordinances. It was impossible for the Jews ever to mistake the origin and object of the Passover. In the subsequent life of the people, no means could have persuaded them that the ordinance dated from the flood and was observed to commemorate that memorable judgment. If the Passover had not been instituted in Egypt at the time and for the objects specified, then in no future age could a whole people have been deceived and led to adopt an observance which they all knew had no foundation in fact. And so also it would have been equally impossible to have induced the Jews of any later age to change the object for which the ordinance was observed, and so introduce a false fact or even a real occurrence into a place in the national ritual. The passage through the Red Sea and the destruction of the Egyptians were historical facts known to both nations at the time; and never afterward could the Jewish people have been led to believe that their ancestors passed through the sea had there been no real foundation for the fact. When a miracle has been wrought in presence of a multitude, when it has been tested by the senses, and when an institution has been established at the time to commemorate the transaction, and when from age to age this institution has thus been observed in memory of the fact, the miracle must be real and the fact true. The force of this principle must be obvious. All these elements may not be found in many facts of history which are nevertheless true, but any fact in which they are all found to unite cannot be false; and thus the Lord, by establishing the Old Testament ordinances at the time and for the objects designated, secured, in the perpetuation of these ordinances, an irrefragable proof for the reality of the miracle, and therefore for the truth of the revelation; because almighty power and goodness would not, by a display of omnipotence, authenticate a messenger or a statement that would deceive. The New Testament miracles were equally real and similarly sustained. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper is equally valuable as an historical proof, and as it has ever been observed by all the Church in memory of the atoning sacrifice on Calvary, so from age to age the bond that connects our faith with the life, the teaching, the miracles and the death of our blessed Lord has never been broken and it cannot be dissolved. So also the feeding of the multitudes, the changing of the water into wine and the resurrection of our Lord were fully attested by many hundreds of witnesses, who willingly surrendered their lives in maintenance of the truth that these wonders were performed; and by these incontestable evidences Omnipotence confirms the Divine mission and infallible teaching of the authors of our most holy faith.

Thus, to adopt the language of a learned commentator of the seventeenth century, "The inspiration pleaded for extends to all the books of the Sacred Scriptures, and to all the writers of them and principal speakers introduced in them; and though all that is contained in them is not of God or inspired by him, as the quotations from heathen writers, the words of Satan, the speeches of bad men and even of good men, in which some things not right are said of God, as by Job and his three friends, yet the writers of the books in which these sayings are were under a divine impulse, inspiration and direction to commit these several things to writing, partly for the truth of historical facts and partly to show the malice of devils and wicked men, as well as the weaknesses and frailties of good men, and all are for our caution and instruction."

PRESERVATION.—The Sacred Scriptures are not only genuine and authentic, but they have been transmitted to us uncorrupted and un mutilated. That they have come down to us—in all essential points—the same as they were given by the authors, rests on most satisfactory evidence. A few letters or even unimportant words may have been omitted or changed in the lapse of ages by transcribers, but the fact is established that the Holy Scriptures have suffered less from the injury of time than any other ancient writings whatever. Even the most imperfect manuscripts extant would not change an article of our faith or ignore one moral precept.

The original manuscripts of the Old Testament were preserved with the utmost care by the Jews, who were famed for their faithful guardianship of their Sacred Books. Even the words and letters were enumerated, and a constant watchfulness was maintained lest errors or omissions should prevail. The translation of the Old Testament into the Septuagint Version when the Canon was closed, the spread of the Jews into different lands with manuscripts in their possession, the division of the Jews into sects and parties who watched each other with jealousy, clearly show that before the time of Christ fabrication or omission was impossible. After that event, the Christians exercised as watchful a care over these books as the Jews had done, and any attempt at fraud by Jews or Christians would immediately have been detected and exposed.

The integrity and purity of the New Testament are equally unquestionable. The rapid multiplication of early manuscripts and translations into other tongues, the spread of copies into distant lands, the reverence of the Christians for their Sacred Books, the rise of sects and parties who generally appealed to the same authority for the truth of their respective systems, unite in showing that any material alteration in these books could not have been made without the fact being known; and thus the ever-watchful hand of Providence may be clearly seen in the manner in which the Sacred Text has been preserved from century to century through the most troubled periods. The histories of mighty empires and treatises on philosophy and literature of great value have perished, and can never be recovered; but the Sacred Scriptures, though more ancient and exposed to the savage hostility of men who sought their destruction by every means, have been faithfully preserved. The prophets never accused the Jews of falsifying their Sacred Books. Jesus charged the Jews with unbelief and other grievous sins, but never with the guilt of mutilating or destroying any part of the Old Testament. An examination of nearly twelve hundred manuscripts affords a remarkable proof of uncorrupted preservation and identity. All other books have shared the usual fate of the progress of time. They have been worn out, neglected or destroyed; but the loving care, the watchful jealousy and honest guardianship which have ever been displayed in the preservation of the Sacred Books, even to the numbering of the words and the letters, are without a parallel, and thus we have secured to us the pure and uncorrupted revelation of God's holy will. The efforts of such tyrants as Antiochus Epiphanes and Diocletian to root out every copy of the Scriptures proved utterly unavailing, and only caused the Word to be more loved and more faithfully treasured. During the bloody persecution of the Syro-Grecian king, all who were found with copies of the Law were put to death, and every copy that could be discovered was burned. The Roman tyrant, after the most barbarous havoc of the Christians, issued an edict commanding them, on pain of death, to deliver up their Bibles. Many complied, but the effect on the Jews and the Christians of these sanguinary courses was to make them love and cherish the Scriptures more and more. They were carefully concealed, copies were carried to distant and secure places, and thus, even in the fire, the inspired revelation which God gave to be the Rule of Faith to his Church in all ages, he has preserved through the ages, and now THE WORD is scattered abroad throughout all the earth, to be a light to all nations.

Among the most effective agencies in preserving the Scriptures has been the multiplying of translations or versions in different languages. The SAMARITAN TEXT of the Pentateuch has already been mentioned. It is nearly the same as the Hebrew text, with the exception of being written in the Samaritan character, which many have believed to be the old Hebrew. For a thousand years this version had fallen into oblivion, although its existence was known by learned men. The celebrated Scaliger drew attention to the fact that it still existed in the East, and, after much labor and delay, six copies were procured by Archbishop Usher. Afterward, another copy was procured, from which Morinus printed the Samaritan Pentateuch in the Paris Polyglot. In a critical point of view it is of great value; it serves to establish correct readings, and it affords irrefragable arguments in support of the authenticity and integrity of the books of Moses. The SAMARITAN VERSION is a literal translation of the Hebrew-Samaritan text into the Samaritan dialect, which is intermediate between the Chaldee and Syriac languages. This version is allowed to be very old, considerably prior to the Christian era. The learned Walton held that it was made before the schism between the Jews and the Samaritans.

The Chaldee Paraphrases or TARGUMS (meaning an interpretation or version) are translations of the Hebrew Scriptures into the Chaldean language, following, it is supposed, the mode of interpretation by Ezra. At first, the expositions were oral, and Onkelos and Jonathan are credited with the labor of compiling the two most celebrated paraphrases, which cover the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the twelve minor prophets. Their chief use is in casting light on the meaning of words and on Jewish ceremonies, customs and laws. The remaining eight are of less value. Their corrupted style, the legends and traditions which they contain, and the lateness of the date of their compilation, unite in establishing their great inferiority.

Allusion has also been made to the SEPTUAGINT, by far the most famous and valuable of all the old versions of the entire Jewish Scriptures. From the time of Alexander the Great numerous colonies of Jews had settled in Egypt, and as they lost the use of the Hebrew tongue the necessity became urgent that the Scriptures should be rendered into Greek for their benefit. Accordingly, THE SEPTUAGINT (i. e., seventy) was prepared by different authors, and it was so called because seventy, or rather seventy-two, elders of the Sanhedrim at Alexandria are believed to have examined and approved of the work. The five books of Moses were translated first in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, and others were added until the whole Old Testament was finished, and the version dates about two hundred and eighty years before the birth of Christ. The transcendent value of this version may be seen from the extensive usage that it obtained in Jewish synagogues, from the fact that our blessed Lord and the Apostles habitually quoted from it, and also from the fact that it helps to determine the state of the Hebrew text at the time when the version was made. Besides, it establishes beyond all doubt the point that our Lord and his inspired Apostles recognized the duty of rendering the Word into the vulgar tongues of all people, so that all men might in their own speech hear the wonderful things of the Lord.

Versions of inferior value, such as the Greek of Aquila, of Theodotion and of Symmachus, may be passed over, but the two principal Syriac versions deserve notice. The PESHITO—i. e., literal or correct—is the most ancient and the most important. It is held by the Syrians that a great part of the Old Testament was translated in the time of Solomon for the use of Hiram, king of Tyre, and that the remainder of the books were translated in the time of Abgarus, the king of Syria. Every competent critic admits the excellence of this version, and speaks of its fidelity in the highest terms. The language is pure, the idioms are rendered with great accuracy, and the whole is written with the ease and fluency of an original. The second and third Epistles of John, the second Epistle of Peter, the Epistle of Jude and the Revelation of John are wanting. The other SYRIAC version, the PHILOXENIAN, called after Philoxenus, who ordered and superintended its preparation, is much later. It contains all the books omitted in the Peshito, and it is of value to critics whose object is to examine various readings in order to restore the genuine text of the original. There are at least seven ARABIC versions. The Persian is limited, comprising only the five books of Moses and the four Gospels, while the ETHIOPIC comprehends the Psalms, some of the minor prophets, a few fragments of other books, together with the New Testament. The COPTIC, or that in the dialect of Lower Egypt, includes only the Pentateuch, the Psalms and the New Testament, and is of a late date; but the SARIDIC version, in the dialect of Upper Egypt, is much older, and is of the greatest value, as it bears evidence of dating from the beginning of the second century. It is confined to the New Testament, and its evidence is of surpassingly great importance.

The ARMENIAN version dates from the end of the fourth century. It is said to have been twice translated from the Syriac, and lastly from the Greek, thus showing considerable care in its preparation; and among the learned it is much esteemed because of the aid which it supplies in settling various readings. The ITALIC is the name given to old Latin versions made by different persons before the time of Jerome. He complained that many copies had become corrupted, and his anxiety to see an accurate copy of the Scriptures in the Latin tongue led him to enter on the most celebrated of all his works. Before Jerome's time the Latin language had become common in many provinces of the Roman empire, and hence it was all-important that provision should be made by a faithful translation for the Christians who understood that tongue alone. He began to revise the Italic, but he soon abandoned that project, and entered on the rendering of a new translation of nearly the whole of the Scriptures. It was gradually introduced into the Church, and the great approbation that it received speedily caused it to be almost universally adopted. Such is the origin of the celebrated VULGATE LATIN VERSION, which dates from A.D. 384. Copies were rapidly multiplied, and in consequence of haste and careless transcription many errors and corruptions appeared in it. An effort was made in 1593 to issue a perfect edition, which received the sanction of the Pontiff, Sixtus V., but his successor, Clement VIII., was obliged to order another edition, in consequence of the multitudinous errors of the copy sanctioned by Sixtus. The imperfect edition of Clement, with all its mistakes, has been used since his day for successive editions and for those now in common use. Still, the Vulgate, when properly edited, is of great importance, and many learned men esteem it as almost equal in value to a manuscript of the fourth century.

The SCLAVONIAN, or Old Russian Version, was executed from the Greek by Cyril in the ninth century, and the GOTHIC Version is very old; but a few chapters of the Epistle of Paul to the Romans and the four Gospels alone remain of it. There are also ancient translations in the Georgian, Armenian, Ethiopic and other languages.

Very early in Anglo-Saxon times repeated efforts were made to have the Scriptures turned into the speech of the common people. The first was a PSALTER by ADHELM of Sherborn, A. D. 706, and at his earnest request EGBERT of Lindisfarne translated the four Gospels, the manuscript of which is to be seen in the British Museum. The venerable Bede, who died A. D. 735, rendered the whole Bible into Saxon. A translation of the Book of Psalms was undertaken by the illustrious King Alfred, who is also said to have translated the greater part of the New Testament. He died A. D. 900, leaving it unfinished. The Pentateuch and several books of the Old Testament were translated from the Vulgate by Ælfric, the archbishop of Canterbury, about a century afterward, and other portions in Saxon continued to be issued from time to time. During the Norman period rhyming paraphrases of different books appeared, but these were so fragmentary in their character, and the language of the people had become so much changed, that the want of a great work to meet the exigencies of the land began to be widely felt.

To the eminent JOHN WYCLIFFE belongs the honor of first making a version of the whole Bible into English, which he completed about A. D. 1380. Its appearance was hailed with delight, but its circulation was greatly restricted because of the extreme costliness of copies before the invention of printing, and by the severe punishments, in many cases amounting to death, to which persons having it in their possession were made liable. Nevertheless, it became an instrument of vast power, and as persecution did not succeed in repressing its circulation to a considerable extent, it contributed greatly to prepare the way for the extensive and happy changes which afterward took place. The first PRINTED copy of the Scriptures in English was produced by William Tyndale, a native of the Valley of the Tyne, in Northumberland. Unable to effect his object in his native land, because of persecution, he went to the Continent—first to Cologne, next to Worms and afterward to Antwerp. There he prepared his version of the New Testament from the Greek, and not from the Latin Vulgate, as former English translators had done. He managed to have the work printed in Holland to the extent of thirteen editions in ten years; and the greater number of these copies found their way secretly into England, where they were widely circulated, and produced the happiest and most enduring results. Fox of Hereford, a fierce opponent of the spread of the Bible, declared that "the lay people do now know the Holy Scriptures better than many of us." Tyndale next proceeded to translate the Pentateuch and the book of Jonah from the Hebrew, and copies of these were largely circulated. He had prepared a long and exceedingly bold and able preface to the book of Jonah, which made a great impression. He made great progress in translating the remainder of the Old Testament, when he was seized by Romish emissaries at Antwerp, and put to death at Vilvorde, near Brussels, A. D. 1536. His manuscripts were happily saved, and falling into the hands of his friend, John Rogers, the work was completed, so that in the year 1537 the whole Bible, with prologues and annotations, was printed, having the letters W. T. in large flowing capitals at the end of the Old Testament, to show the very large share which Tyndale's labors had contributed to that part of the volume; and with "an exhortation to the study of the Bible," signed J. R., thus pointing out Rogers as the editor. For this eminent service Rogers was rewarded with the honor of being the first martyr burned in Smithfield in the reign of Mary. With the view of concealment, the name "Thomas Mathew" was attached to it, and it therefore became known as MATHEW'S BIBLE.

Some two years previously, Coverdale's Bible had been printed at Zurich, but as it was rendered out of the German and Latin, it was speedily superseded by Tyndale's superior version.

After these a revised edition of Tyndale's version appeared, under the title of the GREAT BIBLE. It was commenced by Coverdale, at Paris, in 1538, but the Inquisition interposed, and the sheets, presses and workmen were conveyed to London, where the work was finished, and published in 1539 by royal license. Through Cranmer's influence it was ordered that the clergy should provide "one book of the whole Bible of the largest volume in English, to be set up in the churches." "It is wonderful," says Strype, "to see with what joy the book was received, not only among the learned sort and those that were noted for lovers of the Reformation, but generally all England over; and with what greediness God's word was read, and what resort to places where the reading of it was. Everybody that could bought the book, or busily read it, or got others to read it for them if they could not themselves; and divers more elderly people learned to read on purpose; and even little boys flocked among the rest to hear portions of the Holy Scriptures read." TAVERNER, a learned layman, published a revision of Tyndale in 1539, and Cranmer secured a revised edition of the Great Bible in 1540, for which he prepared a preface.

Next came the very celebrated GENEVAN BIBLE, which was printed in 1560. It was a new translation, with annotations, by William Whittingham and two other English ministers, who had fled to Geneva during the persecution in Queen Mary's reign. This Bible became exceedingly popular—so much so that out of one hundred and thirty editions of Bibles and Testaments printed between 1560 and 1603, ninety were of the Genevan text. The BISHOPS' Bible appeared in 1568. Archbishop Parker engaged several bishops and other learned men to prepare it, and hence the name. Marginal notes were appended, and it exhibits some material differences from other versions. The Romanists, finding that the circulation of the Scriptures could not be repressed, resolved to have a version of their own, and accordingly the New Testament was printed at Rheims in 1582, and the Old Testament at Douay in 1610.

When the celebrated conference was held at Hampton Court in the reign of James VI., a learned Puritan divine, Dr. Reynolds, urged the king to procure a more accurate version than had yet been obtained, whereupon forty-seven learned men were commissioned to enter on the work. They were divided into six companies—two meeting in Oxford, two in Cambridge and two at Westminster. According to the instructions they received, they followed the Bishop's Bible, then in general use, as closely as faithfulness to the original manuscripts and authorities would permit. The translation was commenced in the spring of 1607, and the work occupied almost three years, at the end of which three Bibles—one from Westminster, and one from each of the universities—were produced, and sent after revision to London. Here a committee of six—two from each company—reviewed the whole work, which was finally revised by Dr. Smith (afterward bishop of Gloucester, a very learned man, who wrote the preface) and Dr. Bilson, bishop of Winchester, after which it was first published in 1611. Thus this most precious version—THE AUTHORIZED—was perfected and prepared for use among people using the English tongue. It has justly been admired for its great fidelity, perspicuity and elegance. Time, as it flowed on, has served to deepen the attachment of its readers, until speedily it gained a lodgment in the Church and in the households of God's people so secure that a newly-revised edition would perhaps fail to supplant it. In 1769, Dr. Blayney, under the direction of the vice-chancellor and the delegates of the university, revised the punctuation, the marginal references, also the proper names, and added no less than thirty thousand four hundred and ninety-five new references in the margin. This edition, which, from its accuracy, has been called THE STANDARD, is used for the multiplication of correct copies for public use.

Little need be said about the apocryphal books, except that they do not belong to the canon of Scripture. They are mostly the production of Alexandrian Jews and their descendants. As a collection of ancient Jewish works anterior to Christianity, they may be examined to shed some light on history and exhibit the teachings of uninspired men on prudence and morality. The labors of the great Bible societies have now turned the Word of God into so many languages, and circulated editions so numerous, that the great mass of mankind may now read the revelation of God's merey, and enjoy in their own tongue the inspired message which he has sent for the enlightenment and salvation of the family of man.

INESTIMABLE VALUE.—To comprehend something of the preciousness of the Sacred Record, it is only needful to look at those nations which have lain in darkness respecting the being, the attributes and government of God, which have borne the trials and woes of life, going down to death in ignorance of any way of deliverance from guilt and misery. Wherever the Bible has been received, its effects for time and eternity are such as no other book has ever produced. Character and conduct are altered, elevated and purified; thus eminent virtue in life flows from its reception. It supplies the most powerful motives to honesty, industry and social integrity, while it reveals a perfect system of reconciliation with God, and thus sustains in view of eternity. It has diffused a vastly beneficial influence wherever it has been known, improving the moral and social state of the world to such a degree as to make its own accounts of the depravity of former times, though corroborated by many ancient writers and by the actual existing practices at the present day of the dark parts of the world, appear almost incredible. These effects are seen in all households, in all societies and in all nations, just in proportion to the degree of conformity in which the teachings of the Word are received and its holy precepts obeyed. While heathen countries are profligate and disorderly, it is invariably found that just as men in professedly Christian nations reject the truths of the Bible and set at naught its authority, so far do vice and crime abound. When the influence of God's truth prevails in the heart, then is God honored and served, and then also are the sanctions of human law duly regarded; and thus for time and eternity the power of revelation is shown to be the most healthful and beneficent instrument that the world has ever known. All other systems of religion have proved utterly worthless for the purpose of renovating the character or ameliorating the condition of those who have most heartily received them, and thus, while they have been ineffective to eradicate the depraved principles of the human heart, and to make men pure, benevolent and virtuous in life, they have universally failed to supply any solid ground for peace and happiness in a future state. The Word of God alone, because it is His Message and Word to our fallen, ruined race, fills up the measure of our wants, directs, controls, sustains and comforts through all conditions in time, while it lightens the bed of death and the grave, and allures the soul to a world of glory.

NOTE.—The death of Abel must be supposed to have not long preceded the birth of Seth, since Eve regarded Seth as the substitute "for Abel, whom Cain slew." In that case there will be no difficulty in explaining Cain's exclamation, "Every one who findeth me shall slay me." In one hundred and twenty years after the Creation, the earth may have had a considerable population.

NOTE.—This tabular view is interesting...

NOTE.—This tabular view is interesting and instructive in several particulars. It shows that Noah might have received the account of creation through six equal channels with equal directness, thus: from Adam through Enos only, or from Cainan or Mahalaleel, or Jared or Methuselah, or Lamech, his own father. Lamech was fifty-six years contemporary with Adam, and ninety-three years with Shem; and Shem, again, was contemporary for several years both with Abraham and Isaac. The communication from Adam to Abraham and Isaac is only through Lamech and Shem.

All the generations from Adam to the flood were eleven. Of all these, Adam was contemporary with eight; Seth, with nine; Enos, ten; Cainan, ten; Mahalaleel, ten; Jared, ten; Enoch, nine; Methuselah, eleven; Lamech, eleven; Noah, eight; Shem and brothers, four. Thus, there were never less than nine contemporary generations from Adam to the flood, which would give, in one lineal descent, eighty-one different channels through which the account might be transmitted.

Who ever imagined, without making the comparison, that Shem lived to witness all the glorious things transacted between God and Abraham? Who would have supposed that Abraham and Isaac lived with those who, for one hundred years of their early life, witnessed and assisted in the building of the ark; who were borne triumphantly in it through the swelling flood, saw the opening heavens, felt the heaving earth when its deep foundations were broken up, and heard the groan of a perishing world? Yet such was the fact. Noah was contemporary with every generation after him down to Abraham, and Shem down to Jacob.

These narrations bring the account to the time when minute and particular history commences, and when the art of inscribing upon papyrus, and probably upon parchment, was understood. The participants in the awful scenes of the flood lived to see the Pharaohs, the pyramids and obelisks of Egypt, and probably to have those scenes stereotyped on monuments and in hieroglyphics which have come down to us; so that we have the account, in a manner, second-handed from Shem.

PERIOD OF THE THEOCRACY:

FROM JOSHUA TO SAMUEL (335 YEARS).

| BEFORE CHRIST. | EVENTS FROM JOSHUA TO SAMUEL. | BEFORE CHRIST. | EVENTS FROM JOSHUA TO SAMUEL. |
| 1451 | 10 Nisan, 13-14 April, passage of the Jordan; circumcision at Gilgal, passover 14 Nisan, 17-18 April, siege of Jericho, seven days; war with Ai; convocation on Mount Ebal, perhaps at Pentecost. Peace with Gibeon; confederacy of the five kings of the south; their defeat; after which, in one campaign, Mak-kedah, Libnah, Lachish, Eglon, Hebron, Debir, are taken and destroyed; thus the south is conquered. | 1413 | THE FIRST SERVITUDE, Chushan Rishathaim of Mesopotamia eight years, Judg. iii. 8. |
| 1450 to 1445 | Jabin of Hazor and the other kings of the north are defeated in a battle at Merom. The north is conquered. This war lasted a long time. In 1445, after the return to Gilgal, the separate wars begin, viz., those in which the tribes were to take possession and exterminate the remainder of the Canaanites, especially the Anakim. "They consulted the Lord, saying, Who shall go up for us first against the Canaanites, to fight against them? And the Lord said, Judah shall go up first." Judg. i. 1, 2. Caleb claims Hebron, Josh. xiv. 13. The battle in Bezek, Judg. i. 4-7. Jerusalem is taken and burnt, ver. 8; thence the army, commanded by Caleb, goes to the highlands; Hebron and Debir are taken, Josh. xv. 14 ff.—Meanwhile, Joshua is exterminating the Anakim and other Canaanites from the highlands of Israel, Josh. xi. 23 ff. Thus the subjugation of the land is complete, with the exception of the parts noted, Josh. xiii. 2-6. | 1405 | THE FIRST JUDGE, Othniel, son of Kenaz, Judg. iii. 9. The land had rest forty years, ver. 11. |
| 1445 | In 1445, after the return to Gilgal, the separate wars begin, viz., those in which the tribes were to take possession and exterminate the remainder of the Canaanites, especially the Anakim. "They consulted the Lord, saying, Who shall go up for us first against the Canaanites, to fight against them? And the Lord said, Judah shall go up first." Judg. i. 1, 2. Caleb claims Hebron, Josh. xiv. 13. The battle in Bezek, Judg. i. 4-7. Jerusalem is taken and burnt, ver. 8; thence the army, commanded by Caleb, goes to the highlands; Hebron and Debir are taken, Josh. xv. 14 ff.—Meanwhile, Joshua is exterminating the Anakim and other Canaanites from the highlands of Israel, Josh. xi. 23 ff. Thus the subjugation of the land is complete, with the exception of the parts noted, Josh. xiii. 2-6. | 1343 | THE SECOND SERVITUDE, Eglon of Moab, eighteen years, Judg. iii. 14. |
| 1444 | The convocation at Shiloh; the tabernacle erected; the land divided among the seven tribes, the boundaries of Judah and Joseph having been first defined, Josh. xviii., xix. The cities of refuge and of the Levites are assigned; the trans-Jordanic tribes dismissed, Josh. xx.-xxii. | 1325 | THE SECOND JUDGE, Ehud, Judg. iii. 15. Rest, eighty years, during which time, after the death of Ehud, the THIRD JUDGE was Shamgar. |
| Ab. 1443 | Joshua, one hundred and ten years old, holds a convocation of the whole nation [at Shiloh, Josh. xxiii.], in which he delivers his parting charge; the convocation assembles again at Shechem, and renews the covenant. Joshua dies. | 1305 | THE THIRD SERVITUDE, Jabin of Canaan, twenty years, Judg. iv. 3. |
| — | The Angel of the Lord rebukes the people at Bochim, Judg. ii. 1-5. | 1285 | THE FOURTH JUDGE, Barak, forty years. |
| A period of about 30 years. | The people served the Lord all the days of the elders who outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the Lord, that he did for Israel, Judg. ii. 7. "All that generation died, and there arose another generation after them, which knew not the Lord, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel," ver. 10. "The children of Israel did evil," etc., Judg. iii. 7. | 1245 | THE FOURTH SERVITUDE, the Midianites, seven years, Judg. vi. 1. |
| | | 1238 | THE FIFTH JUDGE, Gideon, forty years, Judg. vi. 11, 12. Abimelech reigns three years. |
| | | | THE SIXTH JUDGE, Tola, twenty-three years, Judg. x. 1. |
| | | | THE SEVENTH JUDGE, Jair, twenty-two years, Judg. x. 3. |
| | | | THE FIFTH SERVITUDE, Philistines and Ammonites, eighteen years, Judg. x. 7. |
| | | | THE EIGHTH JUDGE, Jephthah, six years, Judg. xii. 7. |
| | | | THE NINTH JUDGE, Ibzan, seven years, Judg. xii. 9. |
| | | | Eli, high-priest, forty years. |
| | | to | THE TENTH JUDGE, Elon, ten years, Judg. xii. 11. |
| | | | THE ELEVENTH JUDGE, Abdon, eight years, Judg. xii. 14. |
| | | | THE SIXTH SERVITUDE, Philistines, forty years, Judg. xiii. 1. |
| | | | THE TWELFTH JUDGE, Samson, twenty years, Judg. xv. 20. The birth of Samson was announced during a time of Philistine oppression, Judg. xiii. 5; that is, while the Philistines were oppressing the south and west, and the Ammonites the east, Judg. x. 7. At the beginning of the sixth servitude, he might be between twenty and thirty years old. |
| | | 1116 | Autumn. The ark is taken; Eli dies. Somewhat earlier, Samson is taken; the ark is in captivity seven months; restored in the days of wheat-harvest, 1 Sam. vi. 1, 13 (hence the time of capture is defined). The return of the ark must have preceded Samson's death and the great overthrow of the lords of the Philistines. Perhaps the great sacrifice to Dagon, in Gaza, besides its connection with the rejoicing on account of the capture of Samson (Judg. xvi. 23), may have been intended as a celebration of the deliverance from the plagues, 1 Sam. v., vi. |

INTERMEDIATE PERIOD,

FROM SAMUEL TO DAVID (68 YEARS).

| BEFORE CHRIST. | FROM SAMUEL TO DAVID AS KING. | BEFORE CHRIST. | FROM SAMUEL TO DAVID AS KING. |
|----------------|--|----------------|---|
| 1116 | Probably at Passover (or Pentecost), the day of the deliverance at Mizpeh. Samuel begins to judge Israel. | — | David at Saul's court, hated by Saul; he comes to Samuel, 1 Sam. xviii., xix.; finally quits the court of Saul, and goes to the priest Ahimelech at Nob; thence to the cave at Adullam; pursued by Saul, who slays Ahimelech and the priests; Abiathar escapes to David; David defeats the Philistines at Keilah; spares Saul's life, who takes an oath of him and departs. |
| 1091- | Ishbosheth born. | | Samuel dies. Saul, again pursuing David, is a second time spared by him; David flees to Achish at Gath, sixteen months before the death of Saul. |
| 1086-1079 | David born in one of these years. | 1060 | David at Ziklag all this year. |
| 1070-1063 | In one of these years, Saul, previously anointed and elected, then rejected, is, after his victory over the Ammonites (1 Sam. xi.), solemnly re-elected. The time was about Pentecost, 1 Sam. xii. 17. | 1058, Winter. | The Philistines make war. Saul at Endor; is defeated on the following day, and slays himself. David reigns over Judah in Hebron seven years and six months, 2 Sam. ii. 11. |
| 3d of Saul. | War against the Philistines, 1 Sam. xiii.-xv. | 29. | |
| 4th ———? | Saul sent against Amalek; is proved, and, being found wanting, is rejected. | 1058 | |
| 1063 | David is anointed by Samuel at Bethlehem; is sent for to be minstrel to Saul, 1 Sam. xvi. | 1055, Spring. | |
| — | (After David's return home) the Philistines come out to war at Shochoh; David slays Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. | 1048 | |

NOTE.—The glory of Israel ended with the reign of Solomon. The kingdom was thenceforth dismembered. Ten tribes, of which Ephraim was chief, separated and formed the Kingdom of Israel. Judah and Benjamin alone remained faithful to the house of David. Most of the Levites and many out of the other tribes who feared God (2 Chron. 11. 13-36) adhered to Judah. Jeroboam, the first king of Israel, knew why Solomon had been rejected, and yet he established a system of idolatry at Dan and Bethel. The people shared his feelings, and ever afterward idolatry became a part of the national religion. All the kings of Israel were depraved, and the nation copied the conduct of their kings, refusing all reproof. At the captivity, the land was settled by people from the region of Tigris and Euphrates. A cloud of mystery has ever since hung over the fate of the ten tribes. Very different were the destinies of Judah. Of twenty kings, all descendants of David, who for 388 years held the throne, six are mentioned with great praise—Asa, Jehoshaphat, Uzziah, Jotham, Hezekiah and Josiah—while others are commended. Others were fearfully wicked—Jehoram, Ahaz, Manasseh and Amon—introducing idolatrous worship into the temple itself and filling Jerusalem with blood. After the captivity of Judah the country was not colonized, thus leaving the land free for the people to return. Thus, while prophets warned and while threatened judgments were disregarded, the solemn lesson was displayed that when men and nations voluntarily choose evil and reject counsel, they prepare themselves for the retributions that necessarily follow in the Divine government.

NOTE.—The Book of Psalms is quoted in the New Testament, or clearly referred to, upwards of seventy times.

AUTHORS.—The question of the authorship of many of the Psalms has caused much discussion, and is still an open one. Though an interesting question, it is not vitally important. The Psalms are usually ascribed to the several authors, as follows: David, 85; Solomon, 7; Moses, 9; Asaph, 12; Heman, 1; Ezra, 3; the sons of Korah, 11; Hezekiah, 1; Daniel, 1; Haggai, 1; Unknown, 19.

² Explained and applied to our Lord, Heb. 1. 8, 9; 1 Pet. 3. 22; Eph. 1. 22; Phil. 2. 9–11.

³ Cited by our Lord to prove his Divinity, Matt. 22. 44; by Peter, Acts 2. 32–36; Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 25–28; Heb. 7. 1–28; 8. 1.

⁵ Calmet and most commentators refer this Psalm to the captivity.

NOTE.—The captivity of the Jews in Babylon tended greatly to cure them of the sin of idolatry, to which they had been addicted for so many years; a result which all their previous warnings, corrections and judgments had failed to produce. It diffused the fear of Jehovah among the heathen, and elicited from Cyrus, from Nebuchadnezzar, from Darius, acknowledgments of his perfections and claims. It also prepared the way for the coming of Christ and the dispensation of the Gospel, by taking away many of those things wherein consisted the glory of the Jewish dispensation, and by causing the dispersion of the Jews throughout a great part of the known world. These dispersed Jews, carrying with them the Holy Scriptures containing the prophecies of the Messiah, became the means of diffusing some knowledge of the true religion and of raising, to some extent, a general expectation of the coming of the Saviour. These events were also of great importance, as presenting a striking fulfillment of prophecy.

Babylon having fallen, as had been foretold, Cyrus the conqueror had among his chief men Daniel, the servant of Jehovah. Daniel doubtless brought to the monarch's notice the predictions of Isaiah, and now that at the end of seventy years' captivity Cyrus found the sovereign power in his own hands, he issued a decree, in which, after acknowledging the supremacy of Jehovah, he gave permission to the Jews in any part of his dominions to return to their own land and to rebuild the city and temple of Jerusalem.

The restoration of the Jewish church, temple and worship was an event of the highest consequence, as tending to preserve true religion in the world and preparing the way for the appearance of the Great Deliverer.

PROPHECIES LITERALLY FULFILLED.

| TEXT. | THE FULFILMENT. | TEXT. | THE FULFILMENT. |
| Gen. ix. 25, 27. | The descendants of Shem and Japheth are "ruling" and "enlarged," but the descendants of Ham are still "the servants of servants." | Nah. i., iii. | Nineveh is completely destroyed, and for ages its locality was unknown. |
| Gen. xvi. 10, 12. | The posterity of Ishmael have "multiplied exceedingly," living like "wild men," "their hand against every man," free in "the presence of all their brethren" and of all their enemies. | Isa. xlii., xiv. | Babylon has been swept with "the besom of destruction," is made "a desolation for ever," "a possession for the bitter and pools of water," "a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment and hissing, without an inhabitant." |
| Gen. xvii. 20. | "The sceptre has departed from Judah." | Ezek. xxvi. 4, 5. | Tyre has become "like the top of a rock, a place for fishers to spread their nets upon." |
| Gen. xlix. 10. | The Jews have been "led away into all nations," "Jerusalem has been trodden down by the Gentiles," the people have been "plucked from off their own land," "removed into all the kingdoms of the earth," "scattered among the heathen," "among all people," "sifted among all nations," have "become a proverb," have found "among these nations no ease, and the sole of their foot had no rest," have "been many days without a king and without a sacrifice." | Ezek. xxix. 14, 15. | Egypt became "a base kingdom," tributary to strangers, and never able to "exalt itself above the nations." |
| Lev. xxvi. 38, 39. | | Dan. xi. 37, 39. | The fourth and last of the four great kingdoms was divided into ten kingdoms, and among them has arisen a power with a triple crown, "diverse from the first," "with a mouth speaking very great things," "wearing out the saints of the Most High," "changing times and laws," ruling "over many and dividing the land for gain." |
| Deut. xxviii. 62, 67. | | Luke xxi. 24. | The Jews have been led into all nations, and Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles. |
| Ezek. v. 10, 15. | | 1 Tim. iv. 1-3. | The apostasy here predicted has taken place. The Roman Church has forbidden the priesthood "to marry," and "commanded to abstain from meats." |
| Hos. iii. 4. | | Rev. ii., iii. | The decay of the seven Asiatic churches and their fate have been literally foretold. |
| Num. xxiii. 9. | The Lord has given to the Messiah "the heathen for his inheritance," and the progress of the Gospel is hastening the time when "from the rising of the sun, even to the going down of the same, his name shall be great among the Gentiles." | Rev. xiii.-xvii. | The rise, power and fury of the mystical Babylon are here set forth, and Rome built on seven hills is pointed out as the seat of this tyranny. |
| Num. xxiv. 20. | The family of Esau has become extinct, "cut off for ever," so that there is "none remaining of the house of Esau." The "palaces of Bozrah" have been "devoured by fire." Fire was "kindled in Rabbah and in the palaces thereof," and Ammon was destroyed as in "the day of the whirlwind." | | The Omniscient Lord of all, who seeth the end from the beginning, could alone have foretold these events, which have already come to pass. |
| Ps. ii. 8. | | | |
| Mal. i. 11. | | | |
| Jer. xlix. 17, etc. | | | |
| Ezek. xxv. 12, etc. | | | |
| Joel iii. 19. | | | |
| Amos i. 11, etc. | | | |
| Obad. x. 18, etc. | | | |

PROPHECY COMPARED WITH HISTORY.

| PROPHECY OF FOUR KINGDOMS REPRESENTED BY FOUR BEASTS. | | CORRESPONDING EVENTS IN THEIR HISTORICAL ORDER. | |
|---|--|---|--|
| NO. | THE FIRST BEAST.—DAN. vii. 4. | NO. | ASSYRIAN EMPIRE. |
| 1. | A lion, | 1. | The Babylonian empire; |
| 2. | having eagle's wings; | 2. | Nineveh, etc., added to it—but |
| 3. | the wings were plucked; | 3. | Nineveh was almost destroyed at the fall of Sardanapalus. |
| 4. | it was raised from the ground, | 4. | Yet this empire was again elevated to power, |
| 5. | and made to stand on the feet, as a man, | 5. | and seemed to acquire stability under Nebuchadnezzar, |
| 6. | and a man's heart [intellect] was given to it. | 6. | who laid the foundation of its subsequent policy and authority. |
| THE SECOND BEAST.—DAN. viii. 3, 4. | | PERSIAN EMPIRE. | |
| 1. | A ram | 1. | Darius, or the Persian power. |
| 2. | which had two horns, | 2. | Composed of Media and Persia— |
| 3. | both high, | 3. | both considerable provinces, |
| 4. | but one higher than the other: | 4. | Media the most powerful; yet this most powerful |
| 5. | the highest came up last; | 5. | Median empire, under Dejoces, rose after the other, |
| 6. | the ram pushed west, north and south, | 6. | and extended its conquests, under Cyrus, over Lydia, etc., west; |
| 7. | did as he pleased, and became great. | 7. | over Asia, north; over Babylon, etc., south; and, ruling over such an extent of country, was a great empire. |
| THE THIRD BEAST.—DAN. viii. 5-12. | | GRECIAN EMPIRE. | |
| 1. | A he-goat | 1. | Alexander, or the Greek power, |
| 2. | came from the west, | 2. | came from Europe (west of Asia) |
| 3. | gliding swiftly over the earth; | 3. | with unexampled rapidity of success; |
| 4. | ran unto the ram in the fury of his power, | 4. | attacked Darius furiously, and |
| 5. | smote him, | 5. | beat him—at the Granicus, Issus, etc.; |
| 6. | broke his two horns, | 6. | conquered Persia, Media, etc.; |
| 7. | cast him on the ground, | 7. | ruined the power of Darius, |
| 8. | stamped on him, and | 8. | insomuch that Darius was murdered, etc. |
| 9. | waxed very great; | 9. | Alexander overran Bactriana to India, |
| 10. | when he was strong his great horn was broken, and | 10. | but died at Babylon in the zenith of his fame and power; |
| 11. | instead of it came up four notable ones | 11. | his dominions were parceled among Seleucus, Antigonus, Ptolemy, Cassander (who had been his officers); |
| 12. | toward the four winds of heaven; | 12. | In Babylon, Asia Minor, Egypt, Greece. |
| 13. | out of one of them a little horn waxed great | 13. | Antiochus the Great, succeeded by Antiochus Epiphanes, |
| 14. | toward the south and east, | 14. | conquered Egypt, etc., |
| 15. | which took away the daily sacrifice, cast down the sanctuary, etc. | 15. | and endeavored utterly to subvert the Jewish polity, polluting their temple-worship and sacrifices to the utmost of his power. |
| THE FOURTH BEAST.—DAN. vii. 7, 8; 19-21. | | ROMAN EMPIRE. | |

NOTE.—The above Table states after what Scripture the different portions of the prophetic books are to be read in the order of time, but it does not necessarily imply that there is any connection of subject between the Scripture and the prophecy; as, for instance, 2 Kings xvi. 5, with Isa. vii. x. 1-5, presents us with an astonishing view of the long-suffering of God to one of the most wicked of men: the prophet Isaiah, for the consolation of Ahaz, was sent not only to assure him of immediate safety, but to announce to him one of the most splendid prophecies in the Old Testament respecting the promised Messiah (Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6, etc.).

In studying prophecies, as in parables, we are chiefly to consider their scope and design, without attempting to find too minute or exact an explanation of the poetical symbols or images in which the Sacred Books abound; many of these are simply used as adornments of style—the sky and trees in the background to fill in and beautify the picture.

Many of the Old Testament prophecies have a twofold application: first, directly to the temporal punishments and blessings of the Jews; and secondly, less directly, yet clearly and unequivocally, to the Messiah and His kingdom. In fact, almost all the prophecies in the Old Testament, whatever their direct significance and object, are to be referred to the Gospel, where alone we can find their full completion. We must not, however, look for a mystical or typical meaning in every prophecy; as a rule, when the direct meaning is plain and complete in sense and application, or when history shows an entire fulfilment, it is scarcely needful or expedient to depart from it or to be over-curious to look beyond.

In the reckoning of time, in prophetic language, a day denotes a year, and often things yet future are, to indicate their certainty, spoken of as though past. When the prophets speak of the last days or the latter days, they always refer to the Messianic era, and so also, generally, when they use the expression that day.

THE FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

THE MESSIAH AND THE ESTABLISHMENT AND DIFFUSION OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

AMONG the particulars foretold respecting the promised MESSIAH were, the time when he was to appear (Dan. ix. 25, etc.); the nation, tribe and family from which he was to descend, and the place of his birth (Isa. xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; Mic. v. 2, etc.); his divine as well as his human nature (Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6, 7, etc.); the poverty and meanness of his external condition (Isa. xlix. 7; lii. 14; liii. 2, etc.); and the unparalleled excellence and dignity of his personal character, combining wisdom and knowledge, purity, righteousness and invincible courage with meekness, kindness, compassion and humility, more than human forbearance, unfaltering trust in God and complete resignation to his will (Isa. xi. 2-5; xl. 10, 11; xliii. 2, 3; 1. 5-7; Dan. ix. 26, etc.). The prophecies are also as minutely descriptive of his work and sufferings. They set forth the greatness and the benignity of his miracles and the gracious character of his ministry (Isa. xxv. 6; liii. 4; lxi. 1, etc.); they foretell his rejection by his countrymen and his judicial condemnation; they describe him as "bearing the sins of many;" "healing by his stripes;" "giving his soul an offering for sin;" and "making intercession for transgressors" (Isa. lii. 13-15; liii. 7; Zech. xiii. 7; xii. 10, etc.). To all this they add the most glowing descriptions of his subsequent exaltation and glory, and his success in his great enterprise as the consequence and reward of his sufferings (Isa. ix. 6, 7; lii. 13-15; liii. 10-12, etc.). That all these predictions were fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ, the whole history of his life and death, his resurrection and ascension, abundantly testifies, as will be seen by turning to the references here quoted and to others similar in character.

The prophecies further present to us the character of the GOSPEL as well as of its Author. They explicitly foretell a future and perfect revelation of the Divine will (Isa. xi. 9; xl. 5; Jer. xxxi. 31-34, etc.); and the promulgation of the gospel and the conversion of the Gentiles to a religion proceeding from Judea (Isa. ii. 2-4; xlii. 1-7; xlix. 6; lx. 1-3, etc.)—a place and a people which might seem the most unlikely to have been the instruments of communicating such a gift to the world. For separated as the Jews were from the rest of mankind by their civil institutions, their peculiar prejudices and the feeling of contempt with which they were regarded by other nations, they appeared, especially in their broken and humbled state, the last people from whom a universal religion could be expected to arise. Yet the history of the establishment of Christianity as a known, unquestionable fact contains the fulfilment of all these prophecies which were recorded so many ages before. And though we see not yet that universal reception of the gospel, and that prevalence of Christianity over the whole earth, which these great promises reveal, it is to be remembered, that what has been accomplished is in itself a sure pledge of a more perfect consummation, and the present state of the world in many of its relations encourages the hope, as it affords the opportunity and the means, by the power and grace of God's Holy Spirit, of such universal diffusion.

THE JEWS AND THE LAND OF JUDEA.

While promises were given to the chosen people that prosperity and happiness should attend their obedience, they were threatened, if disobedient, with punishments proportioned to their sins. The first predictions upon this subject were delivered by Moses more than 3200 years ago (Lev. xxvi. 36-39, 44; Deut. iv. 27; xxviii. 20-68), and the writings of succeeding prophets abound with similar declarations. These predictions contain several remarkable peculiarities out of the usual course of human affairs.

1. It was repeatedly foretold that they should be scattered and removed into the utmost parts of the earth (Jer. xv. 4; Ezek. xiii. 10-16; Hosea ix. 17, etc.). And all the records of history attest that dispersion has been the fate of the Jewish people in a manner and degree in which it has never befallen any other race. The first infliction of this national calamity was by the Assyrian power, when the ten tribes were swept into captivity. The second great infliction of it befel the surviving kingdom of Judah at the time of the Babylonian conquest, and after the days of the Messiah, followed the catastrophe effected by the Roman arms, which extended and aggravated the calamity of dispersion beyond any former example.

Not only in the extent and manner of their dispersion, but in its continuance, the case of the Jews is without a parallel. To this day their own country is lying waste and desolate, whilst they, its proper owners, are to be seen everywhere, living in the heart of cities and taking a part among the busiest traffickers in the great markets of the world; present in all countries, but with a home in none; closely incorporated among themselves, yet universally dispersed, intermixed, and yet separated; neither amalgamated nor lost. What race has suffered so much and yet endured so long? What nation has subsisted as a distinct people in their own country so long as the Jews have done in their dispersion in all countries?

2. It was further foretold of them that they should become "an astonishment, a proverb and a by-word among all the nations whither the Lord should lead them" (Deut. xxviii. 37; Jer. xxiv. 9, 10; xxix. 18, etc.). Here a circumstance apparently dependent upon the capricious judgment of men was made the subject of a specific prediction. But is it not one of the most observable things, among all which this outcast people has been made to endure, that over and above spoliation of property, civil disfranchisement and severe persecutions under the name of law, their cup of suffering has had that last ingredient largely infused—that they have been marked out for the scorn and contempt of the world?

3. Another prediction respecting this nation was that while the kingdom—the body politic—was to be destroyed, and the people were to be "sifted" through the nations, yet the seed so sifted was not to perish (Jer. xli. 28; Amos ix. 8, 9). And how remarkable is the history of the Jews, made up of these opposite particulars, destruction and preservation, scattering and safekeeping, combined! They have not been utterly destroyed, though "a full end has been made of their enemies." Though oppressed and vanquished, banished and spoiled, they have survived the mightiest monarchies, and now overspread the world.

It is worthy of notice, with reference to the present condition of this people, that whilst an obstinate attachment to the name and memory of their law is the proximate visible cause which cements and perpetuates their scattered race, their rejection of Christianity, when it was offered to them, is imputed in the Christian Scriptures to their corruption and violation of the moral law, and their culpable blindness as to the sense of the prophecies (Acts vii.; xxviii. 25-28; Rom. ix.-xi.; 2 Cor. iii. 14-18, etc.), and these appear still to be the hindrances to their reception of the gospel.

Many prophecies of more propitious import concerning the Jews, that yet remain to be accomplished, are reserved for testimonies to future generations, if not to the present (Deut. xxx. 3-5; Isa. xi. 11, 12; Jer. xxxi. xxxiii.; Ezek. xxxvi., xxxvii.; Amos ix. 13-15, etc.). And it is a very observable circumstance that, throughout all the changes which have occurred among the kingdoms of the earth during so many centuries, nothing has happened to render the accomplishment of these prophecies impossible, but that, on the contrary, the state of the Jewish people, as well as of Christian and heathen nations at this day, is such as to render them easily capable of receiving a complete fulfilment. And when these predictions of their conversion to Christ shall be accomplished, the whole taken together will be indeed a sign and wonder to all nations, and a prelude to the universal triumph of true Christianity.

Another large class of prophecies (intimately connected with those last mentioned) concerning the LAND OF JUDEA has received an equally striking fulfilment. The particular features of the future desolation, as foretold by the prophets, exactly accord with the descriptions of modern travelers. The country has been "overthrown by strangers," is "laid waste," and is "utterly spoiled;" has become as a "desolate wilderness;" "few men are left," and "the mirth of the land is gone."

THE BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT,

WITH THE AUTHORSHIP AND DATE WHEN WRITTEN.

| WHEN WRITTEN. B. C. | THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES; CALLED THE PENTATEUCH. | WHEN WRITTEN. B. C. |
| 1491 to 1451 | Besides the history of the Creation and of the world to the call of ABRAM, and of the Israelites from that time to the death of Moses, a period of 2552½ years, these Books contain the Divine Law, as given by GOD, through Moses, directly for the government of the chosen people; hence they are called by the Jews, Torot, or "The Law." The Pentateuch (πεντε, "five," and τευχος, "a volume," i. e., the "five-fold book") was written by the great Law-Giver, at different times between B. C. 1491 and 1451—the last eight verses being added by JOSHUA, or by EZRA. In the Jewish MSS. these Books appear as one, divided into fifty-four sections for Sabbath reading in the Synagogue; the division into five Books was made by the translators of the Septuagint, who gave them severally the names they still preserve, except that "Numbers" is the English translation of Ἀριθμοί of the Septuagint. GENESIS.—The First Book of Moses takes its name from the fact that it narrates the particulars of the Genesis or "creation" of the world and of ADAM and EVE (i., ii.); then follows the history of mankind in general till the call of ABRAM; the scope of the history here narrows, and we have the history of ABRAHAM and his descendants to the death of JOSEPH, B. C. 1635. The period covered by Genesis is 2269 years. EXODUS.—The Second Book embraces 145 years, to the erection of the Tabernacle in the desert, B. C. 1491, and comprises the history of the bondage in Egypt; the miraculous plagues resulting in the Deliverance of Israel and their going out from Egypt (hence the name Exodus); their entrance into the Wilderness of Sinai; the promulgation of the Law; and the building of the Tabernacle. The centre and crowning jewel of this Book is the DECALOGUE—that wonderful God-given Code that has ever formed and ever will form the basis of all proper laws. LEVITICUS.—This Book covers but one month; its contents are the duties assigned to the Priests and Levites, and a minute description of the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic dispensation. NUMBERS.—The Book of Numbers gives the history of thirty-eight years, though most of the events belong to the first and last of those years. Its contents are, the numbering (hence the name) or marshaling of the people for their journey to the Promised Land; a statement of their conduct during their wanderings; an account of the consecration of the Tabernacle; a repetition of some of the principal laws and some additional precepts; directions for the division of Canaan; and the numbering at the close of their journey. DEUTERONOMY.—The Fifth Book of Moses is called Deuteronomy (δεύτερος, "second," and νομος, "law," i. e., "the second law," or the "Repeated Law") because it contains a repetition of the Mosaic Law, civil and moral; it also embraces a recapitulation of some of the events of their wanderings; the solemn confirmation of the Law by blessings and cursings on Ebal and Gerizim; predictions relative to their future, including a very striking one of the MESSIAH; the selection of JOSHUA as MOSES' successor; and finally the death and burial of the great leader. | 1491 to 1451 |
| | THE HISTORICAL BOOKS, FROM JOSHUA TO ESTHER. | |
| | The Historical Books narrate the civil and religious history of the Jews from their first settlement in Canaan to their return thither from Babylon—a period of 1018 years. The object being to set forth GOD'S glory, not that of his people or their rulers, these Books do not give a full history, but rather selections therefrom: such facts are dwelt upon as best show the development of the objects and purposes of the Divine government. | |
| 1426 | THE BOOK OF JOSHUA was undoubtedly written by JOSHUA himself, the account of his death and burial being added probably by EZRA. It contains the history of the conquest and partition of Canaan; the renewal of GOD'S covenant with Israel; and the farewell, death and burial of JOSHUA, comprising a period of thirty years. | |
| 1049 | THE BOOK OF JUDGES. —This book covers about 309 years, to the death of SAMSON, B. C. 1120, and comprises the history of the murmurings, adversities, disorder and general anarchy of the Israelites during the period of transition from the Theocratic to the monarchic form of government. The portion from chapter xvii. to the end is a digression. The authorship of this Book has been disputed, but it is imputed to SAMUEL by Jewish authorities. | |
| 1049 | THE BOOK OF RUTH. —The author of this sweet little pastoral, as well as its date, is very uncertain, though, as it was part of the preceding Book in the early Hebrew canon, it may safely be ascribed to the same writer. Ruth, though a Moabitess, and hence a Gentile, was an ancestress of King David. | |
| 1049 to 1016 | THE BOOKS OF SAMUEL. —The division into two Books is not found in the early MSS. It has been decided by the best authorities that SAMUEL wrote the first twenty-four chapters, and NATHAN and GAD the remainder. They contain the history of the Israelites for about 120 years—B. C. 1135 to 1016. The exceedingly romantic story of David, the shepherd-boy, the soldier, the king, the sweet psalmist—his rise from obscurity to the throne of all Israel—makes the Books of Samuel one of the most delightfully interesting of narratives, and the sweet sincere friendship of DAVID and JONATHAN lends an additional charm. | |
| 721 to 458 | THE BOOKS OF THE KINGS (like the former, but one Book in the Jewish MSS.) take up the history of the Nation of Israel at the time of its highest glory, and carry us step by step | |
| | down to the subversion of both Judah and Israel. The First Book covers 126 years, to the death of JEHOSEPHAT, B. C. 889, and the Second Book 300 years, to the destruction of Jerusalem by NEBUCHADNEZZAR, B. C. 588. The Jewish authorities ascribe the authorship to JEREMIAH. THE BOOKS OF CHRONICLES, like those of Samuel and of the Kings, were but one Book in the Hebrew canon, which was called the Book of Diaries; in the Septuagint they were called ἡστοριογραφία, "things omitted;" St. JEROME first called them by the name they now bear. The period they embrace is from ADAM to the Restoration under CYRUS, 3468 years. They form a full Epitome of Jewish History to the year 536 B. C. They were without doubt compiled by EZRA. THE BOOK OF EZRA was written mainly by him, and may be regarded as a supplement to Chronicles; it gives a period of 80 years to the end of Ezra's administration as governor, B. C. 456. Part of this Book (iv.-vii.) was written in Chaldaic, which language the Israelites had learned during their captivity. Between chapters vi. and vii. there occurs a hiatus of 58 years. THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH was in the ancient canon called the Second Book of EZRA, though the major part of it was certainly written by NEHEMIAH himself. He was a man of great firmness, cool judgment, and an earnest servant of GOD—in short, just the man needed by the Jews at the time. He was appointed governor about B. C. 446, and went to work promptly and vigorously to rebuild the wall around Jerusalem, and shortly completed it in spite of fierce opposition from SANBALLAT and other enemies of the Jews. His entire administration is supposed to have extended over 36 years. Besides rebuilding the wall, he effected great reforms among the people. This Book closes the Old Testament History—B. C. 433. THE BOOK OF ESTHER has been ascribed to various authors, but it seems most probable was written by MORDECAI, one of its principal subjects. It tells how ESTHER, a pious Jewish captive, became Queen of Persia, and saved the Jews residing in that realm from the plots of HAMAN; it also tells how MORDECAI arose from a very humble position to be second only to the king. The Ahasuerus of this Book has been shown by excellent authorities to have been XERXES II. The whole story forms a beautiful illustration of GOD'S providential care of His people. | 438 456 433 490 |

THE BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT,

WITH THE AUTHORSHIP AND DATE WHEN WRITTEN.
(CONCLUDED FROM PRECEDING PAGE.)

| 1520 | THE BOOK OF JOB takes rank not only as the first written of the Books of Inspired Scripture, but has been shown by Archbishop USHER and others to be the most ancient literary production in the world, having been written not later than 1520 B. C.—that is, ten centuries before CONFUCIUS and SOLON, more than five centuries before HOMER, and earlier than the earliest date claimed for the Vedas. The best authorities favor the opinion that it was written by JOB himself. It sets forth the sufferings of JOB and his unflinching submission to the Divine will. | |
| 1046 to 160 | THE BOOK OF PSALMS. —This is a collection of Sacred Songs composed at various times and mostly by DAVID. They are models of acceptable devotion: the Christian Church adopts them as her own language, or the language of her Lord. As mere literary productions they have been called the national ballads of the Hebrew people: many of them are perfect gems of Oriental poetry. Not a few of the Psalms are prophetic, containing predictions of the life, character and sufferings of our Saviour. For Date and Origin, and Arrangement for Devotional Purposes, see pages 14 and 15. | 976 |
| 1000 | THE PROVERBS. —This collection of pithy, wise, practical sayings was undoubtedly written by King SOLOMON. The Book assumed its present form some two hundred and fifty years after SOLOMON, during the reign of HEZEKIAH. Its characteristics are those of a poetical moral philosophy. | 1016 |
| | ECCLESIASTES. —The most generally received opinion is that this Book was written by SOLOMON in his old age, after he had repented of his self-indulgences and sins, by way of teaching a solemn lesson from his own melancholy experience. | |
| | SONG OF SOLOMON. —The Hebrew name of this beautiful poem is "The Song of Songs." The tradition of the Jews is that this Song was written by SOLOMON in his youth; the same tradition ascribes the Book of Proverbs to his prime and Ecclesiastes to his old age. It takes rank as one of the finest gems of Oriental poetry. Many Christian writers regard it as a beautiful allegory,—the Bride as the Church of CHRIST and the Bridegroom as her Divine Lord; taking this view, the last ten verses beautifully depict the entire separation of the Church from the world and her perfect consecration to the love and service of her Lord. | |
| THE PROPHETICAL BOOKS, IN THEIR CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER. | | |
| 856 | JONAH. —With the exception of the prayer in chapter iii., this Book is a simple narrative of JONAH's call as a messenger to Nineveh, his attempt to escape the duty, the punishment that overtook him, his subsequent obedience and the result. He lived during the reign of JEROBOAM II., or even earlier; he may indeed have been, as some think, a disciple of ELISHA. | |
| 800 | JOEL. —JOEL prophesied to Judah not later than the reign of UZZIAH, warning the people of their overthrow unless they should repent of their idolatry and turn to GOD. | |
| 790 | AMOS denounces the idolatry of the king and people, and foretells the captivity of Israel, which was fulfilled sixty years later by SHALMANESER; but beyond this he promises them deliverance and a return to more than their pristine glory under Messiah. | |
| 790 to 725 | HOSEA. —HOSEA prophesied to Israel during the turbulent reigns of the last seven kings—in all sixty years. The idolatry everywhere prevalent and its inevitable punishment are his themes; he also tells them of their ultimate restoration under the Messiah. | |
| 760 to 698 | ISAIAH. —Jewish tradition says ISAIAH was nephew to King AMAZIAH, and father-in-law to MANASSEH, by whom he was murdered. His prophetic labors extended at least over a period of forty-seven years, possibly sixty-two years. ISAIAH has been aptly termed the evangelical prophet . His great theme is the humiliation, the work, the glory of the Messiah, and the blessed results of His salvation. It pervades the entire Book, and gives it a charm for the Christian student that no other Book of the Old Testament can rival. Our Lord and His Apostles quote ISAIAH more frequently than all the other prophets. While the writings of ISAIAH are distinguished throughout for peculiar elevation and grandeur of style, those passages, running all through the Book, that tell of the "coming Saviour," his sufferings, patience and glory, are positively sublime. In fact, ISAIAH had as clear a conception of the God-man JESUS as had any of the Apostles. He was so full of Christ that, no matter what his primary topic, it always led him to his one loved theme. | |
| 750 | MICAH wrote during the reigns of JOTHAM, AHAS and HEZEKIAH. His subject is the same as that of AMOS, HOSEA and JOEL. | |
| 720 | NAHUM. —This prophecy of NAHUM was chiefly uttered as a warning to Nineveh, foretelling the overthrow of the Assyrian empire. | |
| 630 | ZEPHANIAH prophesied to both Judah and Israel, foretelling their downfall as a punishment for their idolatry and utter profligacy. | |
| 628 to 586 | JEREMIAH. —JEREMIAH was called to the prophetic office about seventy years after ISAIAH's death, in the thirteenth year of JOSIAH's reign, while quite young. During the pious JOSIAH's reign his influence and advice had great weight, but soon after JEROAKIM ascended the throne JEREMIAH's work was interrupted, though not stopped. During ZEDEKIAH's reign he was arrested and cast into prison, where he was confined till the fall of Jerusalem. He and BARUCH were subsequently compelled to accom- | |
| | pany some of his people in their flight to Egypt, where tradition says he was stoned to death by some of the Jews incensed at his fearless reproaches of their crimes. His writings are remarkable for pathos. The burden of his complaint was the universal wickedness of the princes and people. He predicted the punishments that overtook them, and also foretold the Restoration, mentioning CYRUS by name more than a hundred years before that monarch's birth. His prophecy is full of allusions and direct predictions of the Messiah. | |
| | THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH , some maintain, were written on the death of JOSIAH, but the general opinion among commentators is that they are directly applicable to the wretchedness of the Jews during the captivity, and have prophetic allusion to their future miseries after their dispersion. | |
| | HABAKKUK. —This prophet is supposed to have ministered during the reigns of MANASSEH and AMON, or in that of JEROACHIN. His subject is mainly the judgments that were to overtake the Chaldeans. | 626 |
| | DANIEL. —This great prophet was of noble, if not of royal, blood. He was, with other Hebrew youth, carried captive to Babylon, and educated for service at NEBUCHADNEZZAR's court, where he afterward rose to high positions of great trust. He was ninety years of age at the time of the Restoration under CYRUS, and contributed largely to the consummation by opening CYRUS's eyes to the prophetic passages that had appointed to him the work. His Book contains both narrative and prophecy. In the latter are wonderful predictions as to the Four Great Empires of the Assyrians, Persians, Greeks and Romans. He also foretells with great distinctness the time of Messiah's appearing, the rise and fall of Antichrist and the consummation of all things here below. | 534 |
| | OBADIAH. —This Book consists of but one chapter, directed against the Edomites, telling them that "Edom shall be as though it had never been." | 586 |
| | EZEKIEL. —Like JEREMIAH, EZEKIEL was of the Sacerdotal family. He commenced his ministry about the fifth year of the Captivity. His messages were delivered partly before and partly after the destruction of Jerusalem. The former consist chiefly of reproofs, condemnation and exhortation, while the latter are consolatory, promising the distressed people deliverance and future prosperity. The last nine chapters contain a remarkable Vision clearly referring to the glory of the Church of Christ. | 595 to 572 |
| | HAGGAI. —It was this prophet who predicted that the glory of the Second Temple should exceed that of the First . He flourished about B. C. 520. | 520 |
| | ZECHARIAH was contemporary with HAGGAI. He prophesied very clearly of the advent and glory of the Messiah. | 520 |
| | MALACHI , the last prophet before Christ, prophesied during the governorship of NEHEMIAH. He foretells the preaching of St. John Baptist and the Advent of the Great Deliverer. | 520 |

PRECIOUS STONES OF THE SCRIPTURE.

| STONES. | DESCRIPTIVE AND GENERAL REMARKS. |
| Ad'aman..... | The Hebrew word is twice translated thus (in both instances it is used metaphorically—Ezek. iii.; Zech. vii.); in a third instance, Jer. xvii., it is rendered "Diamond." It means a very hard stone, and the latter is the hardest we know of. |
| Ag'ate..... | One of the stones in the High-priest's breastplate; a variety of quartz occurring in nodules, semi-transparent and uncrystallized. |
| Am'ber..... | This was probably not the substance known among us by that name, but rather a metal; some suppose it was a mixture of brass (or copper) and gold, others regard it as brass highly polished. |
| Am'ethyst..... | In the High-priest's breastplate; violet, bordering on purple, composed of a strong blue and a deep red. |
| Ber'yl..... | In the High-priest's breastplate, also in the foundation of the New Jerusalem; a pellucid gem of a bluish green color, of the genus EMERALD, though less valuable. |
| Car'buncle..... | In the High-priest's breastplate; supposed by some to have been the GARNET, by others the EMERALD; it was certainly a bright flashing gem. |
| Chalced'ony... | One of the stones in the foundation of the New Jerusalem; there is great diversity of opinion concerning it; possibly it was a species of AGATE, variegated and cloudy. |
| Chrys'olite..... | In the foundation of the New Jerusalem; probably a species of TOPAZ; a transparent gem of yellowish green color; the name signifies the golden stone . |
| Chrysopra'sus. | In the foundation of the New Jerusalem; a species of BERYL, resembling the CHRYSOLITE, except that it has a bluish shade in its golden green. |
| Di'amond..... | In the High-priest's breastplate; it is too well known to demand more than mention. |
| Em'erald..... | In the High-priest's breastplate, and in the foundation of the New Jerusalem; see particularly Rev. iv. 3; requires no description here: its superb beauty is well known. Anciently called SMARADUS. |
| Ja'cinth..... | In the High-priest's breastplate, and in the foundation of the New Jerusalem; a handsome gem of a deep reddish yellow; identical with the LIGURE of Ex. xxviii. and xxxix. |
| Jas'per..... | In the High-priest's breastplate, and in the foundation of the New Jerusalem; a species of quartz, red, yellow or green, usually handsomely spotted. |
| Lig'ure..... | See JACINTH. |
| On'yx..... | In the High-priest's breastplate; also, two of them, with the names of the heads of the twelve tribes engraved thereon, were placed on the shoulders of the ephod; it was much used like the Cameo is now, the device being cut on the opaque white, while the darker stripes served as border and groundwork; it was white, blue and gray, or brown, in layers. |
| Ru'by..... | A valuable gem of rose-red color, class Corundum ; in High-priest's breastplate (rendered SARDIUS); some have thought that the AGATE of our version was the RUBY, as that rendered RUBY in two passages was probably RED CORAL. |
| Sap'phire..... | The Hebrew name signifies splendor ; it is second only to the DIAMOND in hardness, lustre and value; generally of beautiful pure blue, sometimes blue, red and yellow combined; in High-priest's breastplate. |
| Sar'dius..... | Supposed to be the RUBY; rendered SARDINE, in Rev. iv. 3, where it is thought to be CORNELIAN. |
| Sar'donyx..... | A variety of the ONYX, with a shade of translucent deep orange brown; in the foundation of the New Jerusalem. |
| To'paz..... | A superb yellow or golden green gem; in High-priest's breastplate, and in the foundation of the New Jerusalem. Some have supposed that it is our CHRYSOLITE. |

TREES AND PLANTS, FRUIT AND FLOWERS, AND SPICES OF BIBLE LANDS.

| TREES, ETC. | DESCRIPTIVE AND GENERAL REMARKS. |
|---------------------------|--|
| Algun,Almug. | Imported by SOLOMON to make columns, balustrades, etc., of the Temple, from Ophir; supposed to have been the RED SANDAL-WOOD TREE, the wood of which is very heavy, hard, fine-grained and of a beautiful garnet color, or it may have been the WHITE SANDAL-WOOD, which is still much used in India for utensils and fine work. |
| Almond..... | This superb tree has ever been a favorite, on account not only of its beauty, but equally so of its early blooming; its beautiful rose-pink blossoms are harbingers of spring. |
| Aloes, or Lign- aloes. | A tree or plant from which was obtained a valuable sweet-scented wood, as, also, a delightful, pungent, aromatic gum prized for perfuming rooms and clothing, and for anointing the dead. The ALOE of Palestine reaches a height of scarce five feet, while the East Indian ALOE frequently attains an altitude of one hundred and twenty feet and girth of twelve feet. |
| Anise..... | Marginal rendering "DILL," probably correct; this was a small plant of little pecuniary value, though both the plant and seeds were used as a carminative and as a condiment. |
| Apple..... | As the APPLE is little known in Palestine, the QUINCE or the CITRON may have been intended; evidently, a large tree and a fruit of rich color, fine flavor and fragrant odor. |
| Ash..... | This may have been the ASH, though many learned critics have held otherwise; the larger number are in favor of the opinion that a species of PINE was intended. |
| Barley..... | The BARLEY of Palestine is our common grain of same name. |
| Bay..... | A symbol of a prosperous career. Possibly a LAUREL or a CEDAR, but more probably the OLEANDER, called the ROSE-BAY, is the tree meant. |
| Bean..... | Still a common article of food in the East; the kinds most used are the WHITE HORSE BEAN and the KIDNEY-BEAN. |
| Box..... | Thought by some to have been a species of CEDAR, but it may with equal probability have been the BOX TREE, as rendered. |
| Bramble..... | This bush has been identified by HASSELQUIST and others as the BLACKBERRY. |
| Brier..... | This variety of the WILD ROSE seems to have been indigenous to the soil of Palestine; the Hebrew word signifies "brier" and "scorpion." |
| Bulrush,Rush. | "BULRUSH" and "RUSH" are used interchangeably in our version; in some places the Egyptian PAPYRUS is intended, in others the common marsh RUSH. |
| Calamus,Sweet Cane. | An ingredient of the holy anointing oil, also mentioned as a perfume; supposed to have been imported from India; the root, stem and flowers, when bruised, are very fragrant. |
| Camphire..... | No doubt this was the HENNA of the Arabs, a shrub rising five or six feet, with fragrant whitish flowers in clusters. The powdered leaves were used as a dye for the finger-nails, etc. |
| Cassia..... | One of the ingredients of the holy anointing oil; the plant resembles CINNAMON, though scarcely so fine or fragrant; the rind or bark was used as a perfume. |
| Cedar..... | At one time cedar trees were very abundant in Palestine, especially in the Lebanon region; its great height, straightness and the hardness and durability of its wood made it very valuable for building. |
| Chestnut..... | The PLANE TREE has been considered by many as the tree meant. A native of Western Asia, it has taken kindly to the soil and climate of Europe and America. |
| Cinnamon..... | One of the ingredients of the holy anointing oil; the tree was the same that now bears the name, and the inner rind was used as now. |
| Cockle..... | An Oriental weed, smaller but of more brilliant flower than the cockle of this country; the plural of the same Hebrew word is rendered "wild-grapes" in Isa. v., and hence some have claimed that it meant noxious weeds in general. |
| Coriander..... | Generally admitted to be the same plant as bears the name now in the East; it is chewed by all classes for the pleasant flavor it imparts to the breath; it is also used to flavor food. |
| Cucumber..... | The well-known plant that is still extensively cultivated in all parts. |
| Cumin..... | This plant was similar to the CORIANDER, and probably the same as that now known as FENNEL or CARAWAY. In time its seeds make an excellent styptic. |
| Cypress..... | Some have maintained that the tree so named in our version was the ILEX, a species of OAK, but it is more likely it was the ordinary EVERGREEN CYPRESS. |
| Date..... | See PALM. |

TREES AND PLANTS, FRUITS AND FLOWERS,

AND SPICES OF BIBLE LANDS.

| TREES, ETC. | DESCRIPTIVE AND GENERAL REMARKS. |
|------------------|--|
| Dove's Dung... | BOCHART pronounces this CHICK-PEAS, while Dr. THOMSON says it was a coarse kind of BEAN. |
| Fig..... | This well-known tree abounded in Palestine, the Mount of Olives being especially noted for its luxuriant growth. |
| Fir..... | The Hebrew word would apply to any tree that could be cut into boards, planks, etc.; doubtless certain species of PINE and JUNIPER were meant, possibly the LARCH or CYPRESS. |
| Fitch, Vetch... | A small pea, though coarse and scarcely palatable, still an article of food, yet chiefly cultivated as food for doves and pigeons. |
| Flags..... | Two Hebrew words rendered thus; the first was probably a name for any marsh-weed; the other word no doubt included sea-weeds in general. |
| Flax..... | This was the common FLAX, and was used, as now, for manufacturing linen. |
| Galbanum..... | A plant from which exudes a resinous gum resembling ASSAFÆTIDA in smell and medicinal properties; an ingredient of the holy anointing oil. |
| Gall..... | The Hebrew word rendered thus usually is in two places translated HEMLOCK; it was some noxious plant, probably the PORRY; it was certainly of bitter taste, and poisonous in some degree. |
| Garlic..... | While this resembles the GARLIC of the present day, it was of a more delicate kind; it was native to Askalon. |
| Gopher..... | Material used in constructing the ark; it may have been the PINE or CEDAR, but more probably the CYPRESS. |
| Gourd..... | This name is applied to two distinct vines; the one, poisonous, either the COLOCYNTH or the WILD CUCUMBER; the other (Jon. iv.) the CASTOR-OIL plant. |
| Grape..... | The GRAPE-VINE is still extensively cultivated in Syria and Palestine, and it flourishes far beyond its average in this country; a bunch of grapes grown at Welbeck weighed 19½ pounds, and measured 19½ inches in length and 19½ inches in breadth or diameter. |
| Grass..... | This term in our version includes all that clothes the ground with verdure; there is a peculiarly beautiful variety noticed by HASSELQUIST as abounding in Palestine, called the SHEEP'S FESCUE. |
| Heath..... | Two Hebrew words; the one may have indicated the HEATHER or LING; the other probably should have been translated "ruins" or "forlorn," though some think it does indicate a plant, and they name the TAMARIX or JUNIPER. |
| Hemlock..... | See GALL. |
| Holm..... | A species of OAK, mentioned only in the Apocryphal Book of the History of SUSANNAH. |
| Husk..... | Archbishop FRENCH says the HUSK mentioned in the Parable of the Prodigal Son was the fruit of the CAROB TREE; they have a hard dark outside and a dull sweet taste. |
| Hyssop..... | Probably the common HYSSOP; it was early valued for its medicinal properties, and used as a remedy for affections of the throat and chest. |
| Juniper..... | Generally supposed to have been a species of broom, a leguminous plant, with white flower; the roots are bitter, and edible only when driven by hunger. |
| Leeks..... | Not our LEEK, but the FENU-GREC, a native of Egypt, resembling CLOVER, used as food by men; it was supposed to be a specific against worms and dysentery. |
| Lentil..... | A leguminous plant, yielding a pulse, resembling small beans; it was chiefly used in soup or pottage. |
| Life, Tree of... | Never identified, and possibly the name indicated no tree, but was used only as symbolic to point to the great Tree of Life, JESUS. |
| Lign-aloe..... | See ALOE. |
| Lily..... | Tradition says that the LILY grew in such quantities that the stalks dried were used as fuel; one kind is particularly noticed by travellers as peculiarly gorgeous. |
| Mallows..... | Supposed by some to have been the SEA-PURLAIN, which grew near the sea-coast, and was eaten chiefly by the poor, but probably a coarse kind of greens, called "Jew's Mallow." |
| Mandrake..... | Still thrives in Syria and Palestine; many strange superstitions clustered around the MANDRAKE; the fruit was about the size of an ordinary egg, and very pleasant to the taste. |
| Mastich..... | The MASTICH TREE is mentioned only in the History of SUSANNAH; it produced a fragrant resin. |
| Meadow..... | In the Hebrew of Gen. xli. 2, 18, the word rendered meadow probably indicated a water-plant or marsh-plant. |
| Melon..... | Generally regarded as indicating the WATERMELON, which grew in great profusion in Egypt and in the Levant; it was about the same as our WATERMELON. |
| Millet..... | Identical with our MILLET; it was cultivated extensively and the green stalks used as fodder, while the grain was much prized. |
| Mint..... | The SPEARMINT, which was much cultivated and used in Palestine; besides its culinary uses, it was scattered over the floors on account of the pleasant scent it exhales when bruised. |
| Mulberry..... | While the MULBERRY abounds in Palestine (see SYCAMINE) the tree intended here was rather a BALSAM TREE distilling white tears of a pungent, acrid taste. |
| Mustard..... | A species that, from a minute seed, grew into a considerable tree, with numerous branches, is described by travellers; its fruit resembled CURRANTS in form, while its seed was similar to our MUSTARD. |
| Myrrh..... | Myrrh is a gum resin extracted from the tree balsam-myrrh, which grows in Arabia and Africa; it exudes from the bark; an ingredient of the holy anointing oil. |
| Myrtle..... | This tree was very popular on account both of its beauty and its sweet scent. Being very prolific, the groves of MYRTLE have been described by travellers as exceedingly handsome. |
| Nettle..... | Not materially different from the NETTLE or THISTLE; too well known to require more than mention. |
| Oak..... | Many varieties of this well-known and always useful tree abounded in the Holy Land. |
| Olive..... | This tree is called in Isaiah the OIL TREE; it still grows luxuriantly everywhere near the Mediterranean, and is abundant in Palestine. It was and still is highly prized. |
| Onion..... | The ONION of Egypt, though similar to that so well known among us, was far superior to it in delicacy and richness of flavor. |
| Palm..... | This was the DATE-PALM TREE, which has ever grown abundantly in the Holy Land, and has always been deservedly a favorite. |
| Pannag..... | Supposed to be the GINSENG; cultivated extensively in China and Chinese Tartary; it has been considered a wonderful panacea for many diseases. |
| Paper-Reed... | See BULRUSH. |
| Pine..... | The name occurs three times in our version, and in each case it is probably a mistranslation, though the PINE TREE did grow in Palestine. |
| Pomegranate... | One of the most ancient and beautiful of fruit and flower trees (it is rather a bush); the fruit is about the size of an orange. |
| Poplar..... | Probably the WHITE POPLAR; it is mentioned but twice in our version, and some have questioned the rendering. |
| Reed..... | CANE growing in the marsh-lands, used for making arrows, also some kinds for manufacturing door-mats, etc. |
| Rose..... | Many varieties abound in Palestine and Syria and other Bible lands; travellers say that the Roses of Syria exceed in beauty and perfection those of any other country. |
| Rue..... | A perennial plant; it was used as a condiment, and to it was attributed the power of preventing poison from affecting the human system; it was also thought to ward off infection. |
| Rush..... | See BULRUSH. |
| Rye..... | See SPELT. |
| Saffron..... | A perennial plant, the stigmas of the flowers of which have long been used as a medicinal stimulant and as a condiment. |
| Shittah..... | Shittim is the plural form, and shittim-wood is the wood of the SHITTIM TREE; this, it is generally agreed, is the ACACIA. |
| Spelt..... | The Hebrew word has been variously rendered "rye" and "fitches," but the grain meant is no doubt SPELT, a variety of wheat with smooth or bald ear. |
| Spikenard..... | The VALERIAN JATAMANSI, the root of which is still a valued drug. |
| Sycamine..... | This tree is mentioned but once, and the MULBERRY TREE is supposed to have been intended; the mulberries of Palestine are described as a delicious fruit resembling our largest blackberries. |
| Sycamore..... | Not the tree that is grown in this country and Europe, but the SYCAMORE-FIG, which, though a lofty and a wide-spreading tree, was yet tender, and its wood of little account. |
| Vine of Sodom. | Not positively determined what tree or vine is intended; among those suggested the more probable seem to be the "mad apples" of the Arabs, or the bitter apple. |
| Wheat..... | About the same in all important points as that of the present day. |
| Willow..... | Two Hebrew words; the one either the WEEPING WILLOW, or more likely the OLEANDER; the other the EGYPTIAN WILLOW. |
| Wormwood..... | The Scripture term is general, comprising various bitter plants. |

SCRIPTURE MEASURES, WEIGHTS AND COINS.

NOTE.—Corrected by the latest scientific discoveries down to the present time; from McCulloch, Gregory, Brande, Lavoisne, Smith and other authorities.

I. MEASURES OF LENGTH AND DISTANCE.

MEASURES OF LENGTH.

THE Bible cubit was shorter than that of other countries. In the times of the Hebrew monarchy, three different cubits were recognized by the Jews. 1. The common cubit, in length of our inches and decimals of an inch, 15.8763, or slightly more than a foot and a quarter. 2. The ancient Mosaic cubit, a hand-breadth longer than the first, and of the same length with the smaller Egyptian cubit, that is, 19.0515 inches, or about a foot and seven inches; and 3. The new cubit, equal to the royal Egyptian cubit, equal to about 20.6 inches, or 1 foot 8½ inches.

MEASURES OF DISTANCE.

A "Sabbath Day's Journey" was 2000 cubits, or six-tenths of a mile. It is said the term originated thus: The rabbins took the text in Exodus xvi. 29: "Let no man go out of his place on the seventh day," and on the strength of it forbade all travelling. Then they made an exception, allowing the walk from the houses next the Tabernacle, across the empty space always kept around it, to the edifice, for the purpose of worship. Now, this empty space was always just 2000 cubits wide. And, finally, they allowed every man to travel on the Sabbath, not more than this distance of 2000 cubits from the wall of his own city in any direction.

The furlong of the New Testament is the Greek Stadium, the length of the celebrated Greek national race-course at Olympia. It consisted of 600 Greek feet, equal in English measure to 606 feet 9 inches. The mile mentioned in the New Testament was possibly a Roman mile.

MEASURES OF SURFACE.

The Jews had no such system as our "square measure," which enabled them to name an area by its size, as "square foot," "acre," etc. They had to designate the space they wanted to describe by naming its length or breadth. The Bishop of Peterborough has added, under this head, a number of interesting and learned calculations, which are here given, with such modifications as the present state of biblical science requires, and using the Mosaic or legal cubit. This cubit is nearly the largest or Egyptian one.

The Altar of Incense.—Only two sides of it, viz., its length and breadth, are expressed by Moses; each of them is affirmed to be one cubit. Yet he declares it was four square; whence we collect that its sides and its top were each just a square cubit. (See Exodus xxx. 2.) Now the Jewish square cubit amounts to almost exactly two and a half English square feet, so that the Altar of Incense was a cube of 2½ feet every way.

The Table of Shew-Bread, Ex. xxv. 23.—This is affirmed to be two cubits in length and one in breadth. None doubt but it was rectangular, containing two Jewish square cubits. These amount to five English square feet, nearly, that is, 722 square inches.

The Boards of the Tabernacle.—These were each ten cubits in length and one and a half in breadth (Ex. xxvi. 16). Being rectangular, they contained 15 Jewish square cubits, or just about 37½ English square feet. They were, in short, boards 15 ft. 10 in. long, and 2 ft. 4½ in. wide. This seems an extraordinary width to be required in a country so destitute of large trees as the wilderness of Sinai.

The Mercy Seat.—This was God's Throne of Grace among the Jews. Moses (Ex. xxv. 17) affirms that its length was two cubits and a half, its breadth one cubit and a half. This makes the area of the Mercy Seat to be 3 ft. 11½ in. long, by 2 ft. 4½ in. wide, or about 8 4-5 square feet.

The Square Cubit in Square Feet.—A square cubit reduced to inches is 19 × 19 = 361 sq. inches. Divide this by 144, the number of square inches in one square foot, and we have 2 73-144 square feet. Reduce this vulgar fraction to decimals, and we have 2.5 square feet, nearly; the exact figures running into a repeating decimal, thus: 2.5076308888 +.

The Court of the Tabernacle.—This was the ground on which the priests performed all the solemn public worship of Israel in Moses' time. The area of this court is described by Moses (Ex. xxvii. 18), by its length 100 cubits and its breadth everywhere 50 cubits. Wherefore this area must be in Jewish measure 5000 square cubits, since that is the product of 100 multiplied into 50. This was then equal to an area of 12,500 square feet.

II. MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

LIQUID MEASURES.

These were: 1, the Log, a word originally meaning a basin; 2, the Hin, an Egyptian word; and 3, the Bath, a Hebrew word meaning "measured."

DRY MEASURES.

1. The Cab (only in 2 Kings vi. 25), a word meaning hollow or concave; 2, the Omer (only in Exodus xvi. 16-36), a word meaning a heap, or a sheaf; 3, the Seah, which means "measure," this being the most usual measure for household uses; 4, the Ephah, an Egyptian word; 5, the Half-bomer or Lethech (in Hosea iii. 2 only), a word meaning something poured out; 6, the Homer (meaning "heap") or Cor, as it is elsewhere called, from the circular vessel in which it was measured.

| Measures. | JOSEPHUS. Gallons. | RABBINISTS. Gallons. |
|--|-----------------------|-------------------------|

III. COINS AND MONEY.

1. MONEY NOT COINED.

All the money mentioned in the Bible before the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, that is, before the period of the return from captivity, was uncoined money, and seems always to have been silver, gold being mentioned as a valuable metal, but not as money. This uncoined money was used by weight. Therefore it is very likely that the money mentioned in the Bible before the times of Ezra and Nehemiah consisted of silver rings, and that it was paid and received by weight, as is described in Genesis xxiii. 16.

2. COINED MONEY.

The Maccabean shekel was a silver piece about as heavy as a silver half dollar. It had on one side a figure of a vase, supposed to have represented the pot of manna preserved in the tabernacle, and on the other side a stem with three flowers, supposed to have represented Aaron's rod that budded. With the vase was an inscription signifying "Shekel of Israel," and with the branch another signifying "Jerusalem the Holy." These inscriptions were in old Hebrew letters, similar in style to our own capitals, and were like the Phœnician and Samaritan alphabets.

The Daric.—The Persian Daric, mentioned in the Old Testament, was a gold coin, so named after Darius, the name of several Persian kings, just as in modern times Louis and Napoleon have been the names of French coins.

"A Piece of Money" (Matt. xvii. 24-27) found in the fish by St. Peter, and with which he paid tribute for himself and Christ, was a stater, a Greek silver piece, of the value of a silver half dollar.

The Penny was the denarius, the principal silver coin of the Romans, up to the beginning of the third century after Christ. It was worth almost exactly 14 cents.

Farthing is the word used in the authorized version of the Bible to translate two different Greek words. One of these is Kodrantēs (Matt. v. 26; Mark xii. 42), which is the Greek form of the Latin word Quadrans. The Roman Quadrans was a small copper coin, and was, as its name indicates, the quadrant or quarter of the as. This as was a copper coin, sixteen of which were equal to a denarius. The as was accordingly about equivalent to the old-fashioned "red cent," and the farthing to a quarter of a cent. The other word translated "farthing" is Assarium (Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6), the Greek form of the Latin Assarium, which was the small as, equal to half the as. This farthing was therefore twice as large as the other.

Mite, in Greek, Lepton, was a copper piece, the smallest coin in circulation, and worth half the first of two farthings above described, viz., the quadrans.

REMARKABLE MOUNTAINS AND HILLS,

AND RIVERS, LAKES AND SEAS OF BIBLE LANDS.

REMARKABLE MOUNTAINS AND HILLS.

| THE NAME. | DESCRIPTIVE AND GENERAL REMARKS. |
|-----------------------|---|
| Ab'arim..... | Chain east of the Jordan; PEOR, NEBO and PISGAH belong to it. |
| Anti-Lib'anus..... | The eastern of two extensive parallel ridges, now called Jebel esh-Shurki . See LEBANON. |
| Ar'arat..... | The term refers to the country Armenia, on the mountains of which the ark rested; the same Hebrew word is in two passages rendered Armenia; there are two peaks especially known as ARARAT; the highest point is 17,750 feet above the sea and 14,573 above the level of the plain. |
| Ba'shan..... | A mountainous country, east of the Jordan; remarkable for height, and for rich woodland and pasturage; the HILL OF BASHAN was HERMON. |
| Cal'vary..... | Usually called a mount, but there is no authority in or out of Scripture for so calling it. |
| Car'mel..... | Range extending about 28 miles; the highest point of MOUNT CARMEL is 1728 feet above the sea; now generally called Mar Elyas . |
| E'bal..... | Mountain in Palestine opposite GERIZIM, on northern side of valley of Shechem; it rises 2700 feet above the sea; now called Sitti Lalamiyah. |
| E'phraim..... | The highland portion of the territory of Ephraim. |
| Ga'reb..... | A hill near Jerusalem; the Hebrew name signifies "scabby," and some suppose it was to this hill lepers were sent "out of the congregation." |
| Ge'bal..... | The mountainous tract extending from the Dead Sea to Petra. |
| Geriz'im..... | A mountain of Ephraim, opposite EBAL, the valley of Shechem (now Nablús) intervening; it rises 2600 feet above the sea. |
| Gilbo'a..... | Ridge of hills rising at Jezreel, eastern end of Plain of Esdraelon; the ridge extends about ten miles, west to east; now called Jebel Fukáah . |
| Gil'ead..... | A mountainous region east of the Jordan, in extent about 60 by 20 miles. |
| Her'mon..... | Also called SION; it was on the north-eastern border of Palestine; it rises boldly, at the southern end of Anti-Libanus, to a height of about 10,000 feet above the sea, from 2000 to 3000 feet above the chain; present name Jebel esh-Sheikh . |
| Hor..... | On the boundary ("at the edge") of Edom, it is the highest and most conspicuous of the sandstone mountains of Edom, its height being 4800 feet above the Mediterranean, and more than 6000 above the Dead Sea; its double top makes it conspicuous far and near; the tomb of Aaron is on the more northern peak; modern name Jebel Nebi Harám . |
| Ho'reb..... | See SINAI. |
| Leb'anon..... | Very celebrated chain north of Palestine; it comprises really two distinct parallel ranges, which enclose the valley of Lebanon (Cœle-Syria); the western, or main, range commences at 33° 20' N. lat., and runs upward of 100 miles south-westwardly; these mountains were remarkable for their scenery, their unrivalled trees and verdure; they ranged in height from 6000 to 10,200 feet above the sea. |
| Ne'bo..... | "Over against Jericho" was the highest peak of the ABARIM range; from its lofty summit Moses viewed the Promised Land, and on it he died and near it was buried; about 4500 feet high. |
| Ol'ives (Olivet)..... | The ridge of OLIVET is about a mile long from north to south, its elevation nearly 300 feet above the site of the Temple in Jerusalem; it is one of the little hills or rocky crowns which encircle the Holy City, being in itself comparatively insignificant. It derives its chief importance and attractiveness from the fact that it was a favorite resort of our SAVIOUR and was the scene of many of the leading incidents of His eventful life; highest point about 2700 feet above the sea. |
| Pe'or..... | One of the ABARIM range, from the summit of which Balaam blessed, while desirous of cursing, Israel. |
| Pis'gah..... | One of the ABARIM range, of which NEBO was the summit. |
| Rim'mon..... | The ROCK RIMMON was a peak north-east of Geba and Michmash. |
| Sama'ria..... | The site on which Omri built the city of the same name. |
| Seir..... | Mountainous district of which HOR was the highest peak. See HOR. |
| Si'nai..... | HOREB was probably the designation of the group, while SINAI denoted a single mountain: these mountains lie nearly in the centre of the peninsula embraced between the two arms of the Red Sea; Horeb was called the "Mountain of God." The highest point was upward of 7000 feet above the sea. |
| Si'on..... | See HERMON. |
| Ta'bor..... | This mountain rises abruptly, from the north-eastern arm of the Plain of Esdraelon, to a height of 1900 feet; it stands entirely insulated, except on the west, where a narrow ridge connects it with the mountains of Nazareth; modern name Jebel et-Túr . |
| Zi'on..... | The southwestern hill of Jerusalem. |

| THE NAME. | DESCRIPTIVE AND GENERAL REMARKS. |
|-----------------------|--|
| Ab'ana..... | Rising in the Anti-Libanus, at a height of 3343 feet, and passing Abila, it flowed through Damascus; modern name Barada . |
| Æ'non..... | "Near to Salim," where John the Baptist baptized; has not been identified; it may have been at Wady Farah , five miles northeast of Jerusalem. |
| Ar'non..... | River east of the JORDAN, the boundary of Moab and of the Amorites; modern name El-Mojeb . |
| Che'bar..... | River of Babylonia, possibly the CHABORAS (now Khabour), but probably the Nahr Malcha , or royal canal of Nebuchadnezzar. |
| Dead Sea..... | This name does not occur in the Bible, but the sea is noticed by a number of names—the Salt Sea, the Sea of the Plain, the East Sea, the Former Sea, and the Sea where there is no difficulty of identification; its usual name now is the DEAD SEA, from the belief, now exploded, that neither vegetable nor animal life could subsist in or near it. It is of an elongated oval shape, save that the regularity of the figure is broken by a large peninsula from its eastern shore; its extreme length is about 46 miles, breadth above 10 and area about 300 square miles—the dimensions vary, however, somewhat, at times. Its level is 1289 feet below that of the Mediterranean. |
| Egypt, river of..... | Two Hebrew words; the one indicates the NILE (see SIHOR); the other the Wady el-Arish , that falls into the Mediterranean, near Rhinocolura. |
| Gal'ilee, sea of..... | The largest, longest and most important river of Western Asia; its length is 1780 miles, over two-thirds of which are navigable for small vessels. Called also Sea of Tiberias, Sea or Lake of Gennesareth or Gennesaret, Sea of Chinnereth or Cinnereth, and Matt. iv. 15, the sea . The Jordan enters it at its northern end and passes out at its southern end, the bed being simply a depression of the great Jordan valley; its level is 653 feet below that of the Mediterranean; the banks on the east are nearly 2000 feet high, deeply furrowed by ravines; the west bank is less regular, but equally picturesque. |
| Gi'hon..... | Second river of Paradise, that "compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia." Like boundaries of Eden, the locality of this river cannot be determined. |
| Great Sea..... | The Mediterranean. |
| Ha'bor..... | River of Mesopotamia; it is the CHABORAS (now Khabour). |
| Hid'dekel..... | The TIGRIS, one of the rivers of Eden; its length is estimated at 1150 miles, of which about 300 miles are navigable for rafts in the seasons of flood. |
| Jab'ok..... | A stream falling into the JORDAN about midway between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea; the present name is Zurka , or the Blue River. |
| Jor'dan..... | The great river of Palestine; its sources are in the Anti-Libanus; a traveller has well said, "It is without any parallel, historical and physical, in the whole world." Macgregor says, "The Jordan is the sacred stream not only of the Jew, who has Moses and the prophets; of the Christian, who treasures his master's life upon earth; of the cast-out Ishmaelite, who has dipped his wandering bloody foot in this river since the days of Hagar; but also of the Moslem faithful, who deeply reverence the Jordan." Present name Esh Shediah . |
| Me'rom..... | The waters of Merom, the name of a lake in northern part of Palestine; the Samachonitis of Josephus, and Bahr el-Háleh of the present day. |
| Moch'mur..... | A wady or torrent, mentioned only in Judith; modern name Wady Makfuriyeh . |
| Nile..... | See SIHOR. |
| Nim'rim..... | The waters of Nimrim, a stream or brook of Moab; now Wady Nemeirah . |
| Phar'par..... | It is eight miles from the city, but flows across the whole plain of Damascus; it is about 40 miles long; modern name Awaj . |
| Pi'son..... | One of the four rivers of Paradise; the most generally received opinion identifies it with the Ganges . |
| Red Sea..... | In some passages, called "the Sea," and in Isaiah, "the Egyptian Sea;" the Hebrew name is "the Sea of Süph;" it lies between Egypt and Arabia; its length is about 1400 miles, average breadth 150 miles, and area 180,000 square miles; its western arm is now called the Gulf of Suez , and its eastern the Gulf of Akaba ; it is very deep, more than 6000 feet at its deepest soundings. |
| Si'hor..... | Or Shihor ; this is the more general Scripture name for the NILE, which recent explorations show to be the longest river in the world, except the Missouri-Mississippi, if we regard the two as one. Its length, as far as ascertained, is 2300 miles in a direct line, to which must be added several hundred on account of its windings. It is also notable for the phenomena of its annual overflow. Modern name Bahr en-Nesl . |
| U'lai..... | A river of Susiana, probably the Eulæus of the Greeks and Romans. |

FIRST CENTURY OF THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

| BEFORE CHRIST. | EVENTS IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. | EVENTS IN ROME AND IN PALESTINE, SYRIA, ETC. | BEFORE CHRIST. |
|-------------------|---|---|-------------------|
| 5 | JESUS is born at Bethlehem, of Judea, on Monday, December 25th , four years and six days before the common era. | Twenty-eighth year of Augustus Cæsar's reign. | 5 |
| 4 | He is circumcised, Jan. 1st ; Feb. 2d He is presented in the Temple; a few days later the Wise Men visit Him, and JOSEPH, in obedience to angelic warning, takes the young child and His mother and flees into Egypt. | Cyrenius is appointed governor of Judea and Varus of Syria. | 4 |
| 2 | Being informed by the angel of Herod's death, JOSEPH, MARY and the Holy Child JESUS return from Egypt and take up their residence at Nazareth. | Antipater makes a plot against his father Herod, but is detected. | 3 |
| | | Herod causes the massacre of all male infants in Judea of two years and under, in the hope of killing the announced King of the Jews. | 2 |
| | | Antipater is put to death, about Nov. 19th or 20th ; Herod dies a terrible death, Nov. 25th , and his kingdom is divided among his sons; Archelaus has Judea, Idumea and Samaria, with title of ethnarch or king; Antipas becomes tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa, and Philip of Trachonitis and vicinity. | |
| YEAR OF OUR LORD. | | | YEAR OF OUR LORD. |
| 8 | JESUS, being twelve years of age, is taken by His reputed father and His mother to the Temple, and, when they leave, He remains; they return, seeking Him, and find Him in the midst of the doctors, "both hearing them and asking them questions." His mother expostulates with Him, and He makes His memorable reply (Luke ii. 49). (April) He goes with MARY and JOSEPH, and is "subject to them," and "increases in wisdom and stature, and in favor with GOD and man." | Tiberius returns to Rome from Rhodes, is adopted by Augustus, and invested with the tribune. | 4 |
| 26 | JOHN BAPTIST begins to preach and baptize; toward the close of the year, JESUS, being about thirty years old, is baptized by JOHN; soon after this He enters upon His public ministry. | There is a great famine at Rome. | 6 |
| 28 | JOHN BAPTIST is beheaded by Herod Antipas. | Archelaus is deposed and banished to Lyons, by Augustus, on account of his tyranny and maladministration; his dominion is reduced to a Roman province and annexed to Syria, Coponius being appointed governor of Judea. | 7 |
| 29 | Friday, April 15th , OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST IS CRUCIFIED, DIES AND IS BURIED; Sunday the 17th , HE RISES FROM THE DEAD; HE APPEARS REPEATEDLY TO CHOSEN WITNESSES, AND Thursday, May 26th , ASCENDS TO HIS FATHER'S RIGHT HAND. | Augustus makes Tiberius his colleague in the empire, Aug. 28th . | 11 |
| | June 5th , the Day of Pentecost, the HOLY GHOST descends upon the Apostles and Disciples, while "they were all with one accord in one place;" St. PETER delivers a powerful discourse, and about three thousand are added to the Church. | A census is taken at Rome, which shows 4,037,000 citizens; Augustus dies, aged 76 years, Aug. 19th , at Nola; Tiberius Nero Cæsar is made emperor the same day. | 14 |
| | [For Chronology of Miracles, see page 55.] | Caiaphas is made High-priest; the Jews are banished from Rome. | 19 |
| 30 | The office of Deacon is created, and seven men are appointed. | Tiberius retires to Caprea, leaving the direction of the empire to Sejanus. | 26 |
| 31 | St. STEPHEN, the first Christian martyr, is stoned to death, and a great persecution ensues. | Pontius Pilate is made governor of Judea. | 31 |
| 33 | SAUL of Tarsus is converted. [For Chronology of St. PAUL's life, see Tabular Memoir, p. 53.] | Sejanus is disgraced and put to death. | 36 |
| 38 | St. MATTHEW writes the Hebrew of his Gospel. [For Chronology of the Books of the New Testament, see pages 50, 51, 52.] | Tiberius declares himself friendly to the Christians, and proposes to enrol JESUS among the gods, but the Senate refuses. | 37 |
| 42 | The name Christians is applied to the followers of CHRIST at Antioch. | Tiberius dies at Misenum, near Baiæ, March 16th or 26th , aged 78 years, and is succeeded by Caius Caligula. | 41 |
| 44 | St. JAMES (the brother of JOHN) is beheaded by Herod Agrippa, who also casts St. PETER into prison, whence he is rescued by an angel. | Pontius Pilate commits suicide, having been deposed and sent into exile. | 43 |
| 45 | The fearful famine, foretold two years before by AGABUS, rages throughout Judea. | The Emperor Caligula assassinated on the fourth day of the Palatine games by Chæreas and others; his uncle Claudius Cæsar succeeds him; Seneca is banished to Corsica. | 44 |
| | | Herod Agrippa I. is smitten by the angel of the Lord, and dies a miserable death (some authorities place this in A. D. 49). | 46 |
| | | Cuspius Fadus is made governor of Judea, etc. | 47 |
| | | Tiberius Alexander is made governor. | 48 |
| | | Claudius takes upon himself the title of censor; he puts to death many of the first men of Rome to gratify the revenge of his wife Messalina. | 49 |
| | | Ventidius Cumanus is made governor of Judea. | 50 |
| | | A census is taken, which is said to show 6,900,000 citizens in Rome; Messalina is put to death for her open crimes. | 52 |
| | | Seneca is recalled from banishment, and made preceptor of Nero Cæsar (afterward emperor). | 54 |
| | | The city of London founded by the Romans. | 59 |
| | | The Jews expelled from Rome by Claudius. | 64 |
| | | Antonius Claudius Felix is made governor of Judea, etc., and Herod Agrippa II. King of the Jews. | 65 |
| | | Claudius is poisoned by his wife Agrippa, and is succeeded by Nero Cæsar, the most infamous of Roman emperors. | 66 |
| | | Nero puts his mother Agrippina to death, and enters upon his fearful career. | 67 |
| | | Gessius Florus is made governor, and the Jews begin their revolt by stoning him. | 68 |
| | | Nero puts Seneca, his former preceptor, and other eminent men, to death. | 69 |
| | | The Jewish war begins in May of this year; 20,000 Jews are slain in Cæsarea; all Syria is filled with slaughter. | 70 |
| | | Vespasian defeats the Jews and takes Josephus, the historian, prisoner. | 77 |
| | | Nero is deposed, and commits suicide; Galba is proclaimed emperor. | 79 |
| | | The Zealots in Jerusalem divide themselves into two parties, and murder one another by thousands, committing the most horrid cruelties. | 80 |
| | | The civil war between Galba, Otho, Vitellius and Vespasian ends in triumph of the last-named, and he assumes the government. | 81 |
| | | Jerusalem is taken and destroyed by Titus, Sept. 7th ; thus ends the Jewish war in the entire overthrow of their state and their dispersion; Josephus estimates 1,100,000 persons perished in the siege, and in all 1,357,660 in the war; the prisoners taken from the Jews, 97,000. | 96 |
| | | A dreadful plague rages in Rome, 10,000 persons dying within a day. | 98 |
| | | Vespasian dies; his son Titus succeeds him. | 99 |
| | | Terrible pestilence breaks out again. | |
| | | Titus dies, Sept. 13th , and his brother Domitian succeeds him. | |
| | | Domitian is killed, and with him ends the line of Cæsars; Nerva becomes emperor. | |
| | | Nerva dies, Jan. 21st , and Trajan, who is absent in Germany, is proclaimed emperor. | |
| | | Trajan enters Rome quietly, without parade. | |
| 95 | The second Roman persecution of the Christians commences; tradition says St. JOHN was thrown into a caldron of boiling oil near the Latin gate at Rome and miraculously preserved; he is afterward banished to the Isle of Patmos. | | |
| 96 | St. JOHN is released from banishment on the accession of Nerva. | | |
| 100 | St. JOHN, the venerable Apostle, the last of the Twelve, is supposed to have died at Ephesus about A. D. 100. | | |

HOW TO READ THE WORD OF GOD.

A FEW SIMPLE RULES.

In order to the profitable reading of the Word of GOD it is necessary to approach its sacred pages with becoming reverence and humility. Some persons read the Bible as a book of amusement, while others peruse it for its antiquarian character and its historical records. Others again read thoughtlessly; being accustomed from childhood to see the Book in their households, they unconsciously come to treat it as a common thing. In order, however, to study it with saving benefit, the heart must be prepared with pious dispositions and with illumination of the HOLY GHOST, which is promised to those who ask it.

1. Read with reverence. Remember that it is an inspired revelation in which ALMIGHTY GOD sets forth His plan of grace and mercy. To read a message from the LORD with lack of reverence or with thoughtlessness is as unwise as it is dangerous.

2. Read with docility. Remember that GOD is the Teacher in the Word. Do not therefore use it so as to make it sustain favorite theories or preconceived opinions. To act thus is to assume that man knows beforehand what GOD should reveal, and that it is not dishonoring to GOD to compel His Word to speak as man pleases. So also to reject the teachings of the Bible because they are humiliating to man's supposed ability or dignity is to act as if GOD knew not our state and nature, and that man were wiser than GOD.

3. Read with intelligence and care. Compare passage with passage, and it will be found that the Bible will be its own interpreter. There are many difficult and profound places in the Bible. Do not reject or deal rashly with such passages. Lay them aside for thought and prayer and future reading, and in time it will be found that light will arise in unexpected quarters, and such portions will be made plain.

4. Read studiously. Let the earnest attention of the mind and all the faculties of the soul be applied, remembering that the Word is given to make wise unto salvation. Do not ignore the lessons of any book or part of a book. Realize the fact that the Bible is all from GOD, and that, though all the books are not of equal interest, they are all designed for our instruction, and they all unite to complete the revelation as a whole. Read the Bible so as to discern the system of truth which pervades the Book, and remember always that if natural things in the universe are worthy of study, much more so are the lessons of JEHOVAH, set forth in His Word, that reveal a Saviour and tell us of the inheritance of the saints in another world.

5. Read regularly. It is related of CHRYSOSTOM that he read the Epistle to the Romans twice every week, and of the Rev. THOMAS GOUGE, that he read fifteen chapters daily. Aim not so much at quantity as at regularity, so as daily to feed on the Word, and thus we shall experience its sustaining and controlling power. In the labors and cares of every-day duty, as well as in the temptations, we shall feel the benefit of such feeding on the Divine counsels in the Holy Word.

6. Study the design of each book. Errors and heresies generally arise from separating passages and reading them without regarding their relative bearing and connection, and applying a dogmatic meaning to them, instead of ever reading with the conviction that no one part and no one book can be opposed to any others, and that a spirit of unity pervades the whole.

7. Discern always the connection which is shown to exist between doctrine and duty, and strive after spiritual obedience. To receive right views of GOD, heaven, hell, the SAVIOUR, pardon and acceptance, will necessarily lead to right feelings, and where the affections and the heart are right, then right acting will follow. In other words, true doctrines, rightly apprehended, are inseparable from spiritual feelings and efforts after corresponding obedience. There is darkness in every mind where mere legality or notional formality prevails.

8. Remember that the Bible is given not only to teach, but to sustain under trial, and to cheer under affliction. This is a world of care, a scene of disappointments, bereavements, trials and distress. This is not the inheritance and the rest. Here the believer walks by faith, and the soul has to lean on an unseen stay, but a never-failing support. Of that support the Word is ever full, both of direction and promise. Read with faith and receive the promise with the simplicity and heartiness of a little child, and it will be found that the LORD is a present help in the time of trouble. Study, then, the Word that teaches the soul how to cast the burden on the LORD.

9. Rely constantly on the teaching of the HOLY SPIRIT, and look for His gracious presence to shine on the Word and make the soul wise unto salvation. Remember that the "natural man receiveth not the things of the SPIRIT OF GOD. They are spiritually discerned." The HOLY GHOST has given the Word by His inspiration, and it is His office to interpret it to the soul, and to seal it on the heart. Ever look for that teaching. Read with humility, with a tender, docile spirit, being assured that if any man lack wisdom, let him ask of GOD, who giveth liberally, and it shall be given to him.

GREEK AND ROMAN DEITIES,

AND RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

DURING the ministry of our SAVIOUR His journeys and teachings were confined to the territory of Palestine. He did not therefore come personally into contact with the heathen temples of the Greeks or the Romans, or mingle with the followers and priests of these false systems. His nearest approach to heathenism in a dominant form was at the time of His visit to the coasts of Tyre and Sidon (Matt. xv. 21, 29) and His journey back through the northern districts of the Sea of Galilee. The disciples, however, early came into contact with all the varied forms of the idolatry of the empire. At Antioch, in Cyprus and Crete, in the cities of Asia Minor, in Greece and in Italy, indeed wherever they went in their missionary labors, in all lands around the Mediterranean Sea, they encountered the popular system of the day, just as those who went eastward had to meet the followers of the Persian and Syrian systems. It is important, therefore, that a brief description of the leading deities of Greece and Rome should be given, in order that the character of the religions may be comprehended with which the Gospel had to contend, and over which it so rapidly and signally prevailed. The Romans received their deities and their mythology from the Greeks, but in many respects the people of different provinces modified their beliefs respecting the lives and characters of their gods.

JUPITER, or JOVE, was the supreme Roman deity. He was held to be the eldest son of SATURN and RHEA. He and his brothers NEPTUNE and PLUTO divided the world by lot among themselves. The heavens, the air and the clouds constituted his wide domain (Homer, II. 13: 355). All aerial phenomena were under his control; therefore, lightnings, thunder, storms, rain and snow were exhibitions of his will. These, at times, were warnings, at others, judgments. He is represented as a Grecian prince dwelling in royal state on Mount Olympus with JUNO and his household. The poets describe his quarrels with JUNO, her rage and the immoralities of which they were all guilty. Though HOMER mentions the parents of the gods, he never states the localities in which they had been born. An old tradition made the Isle of Crete the birth-place of the Olympian JUPITER. He was rocked in a golden cradle, fed on honey and the milk of the goat Amalthea, while the Curetes danced around him, clashing their arms to prevent SATURN from hearing his cries. The Arcadians contended that JUPITER first saw the light among their mountains.

He first espoused METIS, but being warned that her child would equal himself in knowledge and strength, he swallowed her, and the goddess MINERVA sprang from his head. His second wife, THEMIS, bore him the SEASONS and the FATES. The ocean nymph, EURYNOME, produced him the GRACES. CERES became the mother of PROSERPINA; MNEMOSYNE, of the MUSES, and LATONA, of APOLLO and DIANA. His last spouse was JUNO, the mother of MARS, HEBE and the ILITHYIÆ. The oak and the eagle were dedicated to him. His celebrated shield (Aegis), which sent forth thunder and lightning, was made by VULCAN, and, according to HOMER, APOLLO sometimes bore it for him.

The most celebrated of his temples was at Olympia, in Elis, where every fourth year the Olympic games were celebrated. He had a splendid temple also in Ægina, but his greatest oracle was at Dodona. The Greeks represented him as a model of dignity and majesty, with his eagle standing beside his throne, while he grasped his sceptre and thunder.

NEPTUNE, the god of the sea, the brother of JUPITER and PLUTO, was one of the most ancient of the Grecian deities. His wife was AMPHITRITE, and their children were TRITON and RHODOS. The latter became the bride of HELIUS, the sun god. NEPTUNE had a numerous progeny. Beside his residence on Olympus, NEPTUNE had a splendid palace beneath the sea at Ægæ, and HOMER gives a glowing description of his passage from this palace on his way to Troy, the chariot-wheels only touching the watery plain as the monsters of the deep gambled around their king. The most celebrated of his temples were at the Isthmus of Corinth, at Onchestus, Helice, Træzene and the promontories of Tænærum and Geræstus. NEPTUNE is represented, like JUPITER, as serene and majestic, his form strong and muscular, and hence "the chest of NEPTUNE" is a poetic expression to indicate power. He usually bears in his hand the trident, the three-pronged symbol of his power, and dolphins and other marine animals accompany his images. The animals sacrificed to him were usually black bulls, rams and pigs. In Ionia and the commercial cities of Doris he was extensively worshipped. The horse was sacred to NEPTUNE and the rivers, and was employed as a general symbol of the waters, the idea being, according to some, that NEPTUNE introduced the horse into Greece over the sea.

PLUTO, called also HADES, was the brother of JUPITER and NEPTUNE. He was the lord of the lower world, or the abode of the dead. His rule was inexorable, and as he was deaf to supplication, and permitted no return from his realms, he was an object of aversion to gods and men. His region is represented in the Itiad as being within the earth. Its name was Erebus, a dreary, dark and cheerless scene, where the dead, both good and bad, wandered in a weak, unhappy state, having no strength or power of body and mind. Some suffered more than others, for instance, SISYPHUS, TITYUS and TANTALUS. The whole realm and rule were dreary and to be dreaded. The cypress, the narcissus and the ailanthus were sacred to him, and black animals, as oxen and sheep, were sacrificed to him.

JUNO, a Roman female deity, identical with the Grecian HERA, was the daughter of SATURN and RHEA. She was sister and wife of JUPITER. Their children were MARS, HEBE and the ILITHYIÆ, to whom some add the GRACES. VULCAN was the son of JUNO, without a father, and she was said by some to have originated the monster TYPHON. The chief seats of her worship were Argos, Samos and Plata, but she was generally honored, as at Sparta, Corinth, Coreyra and elsewhere. The willow, the pomegranate, the dittany and the lily were her sacred plants, while the cuckoo and the peacock were appropriated to the Olympian queen.

MARS was the son of JUPITER and JUNO, or, as some have said, of BELLONA. OVID, in his Metamorphoses, relates the fables connected with his origin. MARS delighted in war and strife, yet the skill of MINERVA defeated his violence. HOMER describes his enormous size, his terrible voice and great martial power. TERROR and FEAR (DEIMOS and PHOBOS) were his sons; they and his sister STRIFE (ERIS) accompanied him to battle. HESIOD says that HARMONIA was the daughter of MARS and VENUS.

SATURN, called by the Greeks KRONOS, was the son of CÆLUS or URANUS and TERRA, the goddess of the earth. TERRA had a mighty progeny, the Titans, six males and six females, the youngest being SATURN. The children were hated by their father, who thrust them into a cavern of Earth. EARTH, grieved at such conduct, produced the substance called "steel," with which, in the form of a sickle, having aroused the Titans and SATURN, the latter mutilated his father, and the drops of blood falling on the earth gave birth to ERINNYES, the Giants and the Melian nymphs. After this SATURN obtained his father's kingdom on condition that he should not bring up any male children. RHEA, his wife, concealed the birth of JUPITER, NEPTUNE, PLUTO and JUNO, and instead of the children gave him large stones, which he swallowed. SATURN was in consequence of this myth confounded with the grim deity MOLOCH of the Tyrians, the Carthaginians and the Phœnicians. SATURN has been held to be the same with TIME, and on this account he is represented as devouring his children and casting them up, as TIME devours and produces again. NIEBUHR regards SATURN as the earth, and CREUZER considers him as the great god of nature, who suffices for himself, and who is satisfied with his own comprehensive powers. There were no temples of KRONOS in Greece, but at Athens there was a chapel dedicated to him and RHEA. Sacrifices were made to him at Olympia, and the Athenians had a festival in his honor. The priests among the Romans offered sacrifices to him bareheaded. He is represented as an old man, bareheaded, holding a scythe in his hand, and a serpent, which bites its own tail—an emblem of time and the revolution of the year. Fetters were hung on his statues in commemoration of his having been imprisoned by JUPITER, and all slaves when freed dedicated their chains to him.

APOLLO, the son of JUPITER and LATONA, was the god of archery (HOMER), prophecy and music. All sudden deaths were ascribed to him as rewards and punishments. At the banquets of the gods he played on his lyre at Olympus. Bards and prophets received their skill from him and the Muses. The chief seats of his worship were at Delphi in Phocis, Delos, Patara in Lycia, Claros in Ionia, Grinium in Æolis and Didymi in Miletus, where revelations were given. The hawk, swan and cicada were dedicated to him, and the bay tree was sacred under his care. His statues represented him as the perfection of manly beauty, in his hands a bow or a lyre, and a chaplet of bay leaves around his head. The statue "APOLLO BELVIDERE" shows the idea that the ancients entertained of his form.

DIANA, called by the Greeks ARTEMIS, was the daughter of JUPITER and LATONA. She was sister to APOLLO, and presided over the chase, and the sudden deaths of women were caused by her. She is a virgin speeding over the hills, with a train of nymphs, in pursuit of game. She turned ACTÆON into a stag for looking at her bathing. ORION perished by her arrows, and with her brother she destroyed the children of NOBE. It is likely that, as a threefold goddess, she was worshipped as SELENE, the MOON, as ARTEMIS or DIANA, Earth, and as HECATE or PROSERPINA in Erebus. She was also identified as the goddess of Nature, and adored at Ephesus, where her image (Acts xix. 21-41) was held sacred. It was of great size and of immense value, covered with breasts and heads of animals to denote the fecundity of nature.

MERCURY, called HERMES by the Greeks, was the messenger of the gods, and particularly of JUPITER. He was the god of speech, eloquence (Acts xiv. 8-18), the patron of orators, of merchants, of all dishonest persons, of thieves, of travelers and of shepherds. He presided over highways, cross-roads, and conducted the souls of the dead to the regions below. He was usually represented with a chlamys or cloak, a petasus or winged cap and the talaria or winged sandals. In his hand he bears the caduceus or staff, with two serpents twined around it, with wings at the end of the rod. The older statues were mere posts with a rude head and a beard carved on them, and they were erected on roads, foot-paths and in gardens.

MINERVA, or ATHENE, the daughter of JUPITER, was the goddess of wisdom and skill, and of all the liberal arts and sciences. Every prudent chief was viewed as being under her patronage, and she was the inspirer of all able artists. Thus she inspired EPÆUS to frame the wooden horse by which Troy was taken, and the celebrated ship Argo. Her favorite plant was the olive, and she was chiefly honored at Athens, the city to which she gave its name, and where the splendid festival Panathenæa was celebrated in her honor.

VENUS, a very celebrated Roman deity, was considered as identical with the Grecian goddess APHRODITE. HESIOD says she sprang from the foam of the sea into which the mutilated portions of URANUS had been thrown by his son SATURN. She landed on the island of Cythera, and thence she went to Cyprus with LOVE and DESIRE attending her. She was the patroness of Love, presided over birth and growth in general, and was the goddess of gardens. Her favorite plants were the rose and the myrtle. She was chiefly worshipped at Cythera and Cyprus, where at Paphos, Golgi, Idalium and Amathus she was adored. At Cnidus, Miletus, Coos, Corinth, Athens and Sparta she was worshipped, and the services in her honor were often scenes of great immorality.

The Greeks and Romans possessed an insufficient idea of the omnipresence, omnipotence and unity of the Deity. Their gods had been rulers or heroes, and they were endowed with all the passions and vices of humanity. The powers of nature, the phenomena of the heavens, and natural objects were personified and represented by images, and these became objects of adoration. The testimony of history establishes the fact that the worshipping of impure, wicked and abominable objects conducted to immoralities in those who served them (Rom. i. 21-32). The educated classes perceived the absurdity of such worship, and they became sceptics and utterly reckless. The lower classes groveled in superstition and darkness, without God and without hope. To a people so situated, when the Gospel came in power, it was found to be a message worthy of the great Father of the Universe. To the Roman slave in his thralldom, and the pauper in his field of toil, it brought freedom and opulence. To thoughtful men, who meditated on life, moral evil and eternity, it brought rest and peace; and so in the Apostolic age the missionary of the Cross was recognized as a messenger of mercy, and multitudes hastened to cast their idols aside and to embrace the GREAT DELIVERER who brought peace to their souls.

PROGRESSIVE REVELATION OF DIVINE TRUTH.

THE thoughtful student of the Word of God will not fail to notice the elementary character of the Pentateuch, as well as the directness and simplicity of the language and style of the early books of the Old Testament as contrasted with the matter and the style of the Epistles in the New Testament. An ascending scale of progress is very perceptible. In the revelation of doctrine there is a development, just as in the natural world there is a progression from the germ or the seed to the condition of the fully expanded tree.

A peculiarity is observable also in the mode in which Divine truth has been given to the Church. Instead of a stream issuing from the fountain and holding its way onward with a gradual increase, as it keeps to a level plane, the current is suddenly enlarged at distinct periods by new and great additions, which elevate the stream to a higher plane, on which it continues to flow. In process of time another addition is vouchsafed, and on a still higher platform the stream advances, and thus it has continued to grow until in due time the Church has received the fullness of doctrine, which it was the purpose of the LORD to bestow.

1. From the fall of ADAM until the Deluge, the Church was left with the knowledge that in time "the Seed of the woman" would bruise the head of the serpent, that thus a moral deliverer would appear. There was enough here to form a basis for faith and hope. In the expulsion from Eden and in the government of the universe, GOD had indicated His hatred of sin, yet from century to century the human race seems to have disregarded the promise, and to have degenerated into a condition of violence and licentiousness that threatened to dissolve the bonds of society. The long-threatened Deluge came, and thus the LORD asserted His character as the Moral Governor, showing that patience is neither approval nor forgetfulness, and that persistency in evil entails misery and woe.

2. In the family of NOAH the new world entered on its course with all the lessons of the past. The terrors of the LORD had been so unmistakably displayed as to teach men that with Him there was judgment as well as mercy. Yet the tendency of the race soon became manifest, and a system of symbolizing of the powers of nature began to engross the minds of men, which tended to the lowest forms of idolatry, and speedily extended its fascinating influence. In this transition state another important and gracious manifestation took place.

3. ABRAHAM was called, and the announcement made that in him, according to the flesh, should the Deliverer come. As yet, the Messiah might be of any nation, of any race or family, or in any age. Now, the faith of the Church was directed to a particular quarter, and the descent of the Messiah, in a certain line, was declared, so that this prophetic promise enlarged the spiritual vision and established the faith of the Church. Brought into Egypt and sunk in bondage as the descendants of ABRAHAM were, their condition seemed to be hopeless, and the LORD appeared to have forgotten His promise, but in the depth of their darkness and suffering their lot was suddenly changed to light and freedom.

4. Under the leadership of MOSES the Hebrews went out from Egypt—a mighty host. They received at his hands a wonderful system of social and ecclesiastical laws. They were provided with all the details of a complicated churchly system, that tended to keep them separate from the heathen around them, and to perpetuate among them the increased knowledge of GOD and of salvation which their sacrifices and typical institutions contained. The commentary on the Levitical system in the Epistle to the Hebrews shows that all the great fundamental doctrines of the Gospel were exhibited in type and figure in the institutions of the Law, and thus under MOSES the Church stands forth in advance of any former condition, invested with privileges such as no former age had enjoyed.

5. Time rolled on, and the unsettled transition period of the Judges came to an end. The weak administration of ELI and the evil conduct of his sons, and of the sons of SAMUEL also, led the people to desire the consolidation of the nation; and now SAMUEL, the last of the Judges, founder of the monarchy, and first of the great prophetic band that from his day indicated the will of GOD to the people, takes his place as a reformer, and stands at the head of another distinct period. As the projector of the Schools of the Prophets and the originator of the other educational institutions that so largely affected the social life of the Jewish people until the captivity, SAMUEL's influence and policy mark out a distinct era.

6. The rulers and the people, both in Israel and in Judah, seemed unable to comprehend the folly and the wickedness of their idolatrous departure from the service of Jehovah, and to realize the fact that those judgments would overtake them of which their prophets so plainly spake, if they did not repent and turn to the LORD. Their captivity served to humble those who had been carried to the Tigris and the Euphrates, and the oppression endured by those who had been left in the land prepared them for recognizing the mercy of GOD in their restoration under EZRA and NEHEMIAH. As a statesman and a patriot, perhaps NEHEMIAH never had a superior. Great as MOSES was as a legislator, NEHEMIAH was as eminent as a restorer of the civil and religious polity of his countrymen.

There is little doubt but that during the captivity the spiritual necessities of the people led them when separated from the temple to form associations for religious objects, and after the Restoration, under the administration of NEHEMIAH and his immediate successors, the synagogue system rapidly spread, and ere long it extended over the land. The advantages of parochial or congregational worship were thus enjoyed by the people in their "meeting-houses," where the Law was read. Harkening to the Scriptures in such assemblies, the people were warned against the sins of their fathers, and the old tendency to idolatry was successfully opposed. Such a system of parochial or village worship was really a framework for the Christian Church, as the rulers and members of these synagogues had only to recognize the Messiah when he appeared, and forthwith they became Christian organizations.

7. In the fulness of time the SAVIOUR came, according to the sure word of prophecy. As the paschal lamb was slain in the eve of the Jewish day, so the Great Antitype died for our sins in the eve of the Jewish Church's existence and at the close of the national day. The sceptre was departing from Judah. The power of Rome was rapidly turning Palestine into a mere province of the empire, and every vestige of Jewish rule was about to disappear. That which in Jewish sacrifices and symbols was exhibited to the Church during ages of expectancy was now realized in the person and work of the SON OF GOD. On the cross He could utter, "It is finished," and then bowing His head, He gave up the ghost.

This section, however, has not so much to do with our LORD in His office of a Priest atoning as in His prophetic office as a Great Teacher. The Jews did not fall into actual idolatry after the captivity, but so far as spiritual worship and right views of the MESSIAH'S kingdom were concerned they had sadly degenerated. The priesthood and the chief priests had become political, and they desired a MESSIAH mainly in order to beat back the power of Rome and consolidate the Jewish rule. The sect of the Pharisees had extended a spirit of formalism and superstition among the people. They had set "the traditions of the elders" not only on a level with the Revealed Word, but on many points they had made the Word of none effect by their traditions. On the other hand, the Sadducees had fallen into a cold, degrading scepticism, rejecting immortality and all the sanctions of a future life, thus striking at the very basis of moral obligation. Now, our LORD, as the GREAT TEACHER, opened up the character of the Law of GOD, showing the spirituality of its nature, the universality of its demands and the sanctions by which it exacts obedience. He unveiled the utter sinfulness of the Pharisaic spirit, and showed the inutility of mere external obedience while the heart was corrupt, and the life in aim and motive was opposed to GOD. He taught by precept and example what it was to be good, and merciful, and benevolent, and kind, to sow in this life, and what to expect in the future harvest.

Against the Sadducean errors He established the great doctrine of immortality, which He illustrated and confirmed by His own Resurrection. Over evil spirits, over disease and death, over the kingdom of nature, as well as over the souls of men, He showed His lordship and sovereignty, and so with signs and wonders manifold He established the divinity of His mission and showed that He was the SON OF GOD with power. Thus teaching, He called sinners to Himself to receive and rest in a full salvation. By fervid appeals and earnest supplications, by illustrations drawn from Jewish rites that told of safety and of healing, He proclaimed His mission and called sinners to Him, that in Him they might enjoy eternal life.

8. Plain though our LORD'S teaching had been before His death, and still more clear after His resurrection, yet His Apostles were slow to learn. They clung to the idea of a great Jewish kingdom under the sway of a MESSIAH whose reign would be more powerful than that of DAVID, more magnificent than that of SOLOMON, and more permanent than that of any judge or monarch of all their line. The teaching of our LORD after His resurrection impressed their minds, and as they waited in Jerusalem they in some measure recognized the truth that His kingdom was not to be of the fashion of this world, that in its nature it was spiritual—a dominion over souls—and that earthly boundaries were not to limit its extent, and that earthly monarchs themselves would become its citizens and recognize the ascended SAVIOUR as LORD and RULER over all. At the Pentecostal effusion of the SPIRIT their minds were opened to discern the Gospel message in all its fulness, and then a PETER, a JAMES and a JOHN could preach and write, as their Epistles testify. A mightier intellect—PAUL, the Pharisee, humbled and taught by the risen SAVIOUR—goes forth at His command as the herald of salvation, and in his Epistles the Church has the full completion of doctrine which was the purpose of the KING OF ZION to bestow. The promise in the garden was simple, but it was enough for faith. When PETER and PAUL and JOHN laid down their pens, nothing more profound, more elevated or more extensive in their range could be required for the Church's use than the truths which these servants of the LORD had proclaimed!

| Psa. xxxix. 4... | Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am. | | |

TO READ THE BIBLE THROUGH IN A YEAR.

Various tables have been constructed for this object, but generally they are confused and difficult to be carried out. Perhaps the following is one of the simplest arrangements that could be adopted:

If the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm be reckoned as eleven chapters (i. e., two parts for a chapter), then all the chapters in the Old Testament will number nine hundred and thirty-nine (939). In the New Testament there are two hundred and sixty chapters (260). Now, if the Lord's Days, or fifty-two Sabbaths, be devoted to the New Testament, five chapters daily would include the whole book (i. e., $52 \times 5 = 260$). Reading three chapters daily, on the other days of the week, or during three hundred and thirteen days (i. e., $313 \times 3 = 939$), would exactly make nine hundred and thirty-nine, the number of chapters contained in the Old Testament. It is obvious that if the Old and New Testaments be read through consecutively from day to day, the same object will be accomplished by reading five chapters on the Lord's Days, and three on each of the other days of the week, still remembering to take two parts of the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm as a chapter.

During leap years, the extra day may be provided for by the division of some of the long chapters, as judgment would direct; so as to have a portion for the last day of February.

It is obvious that such a mode of reading the Word of God may become very unprofitable, as quantity might come to be the chief object, instead of that thoughtful comparison of passage with passage, and that lengthened and prayerful examination of difficult portions, which alone can enable the Christian reader to profit by THE WORD.

JEWISH SEASONS, SACRIFICES AND OBLATIONS.

THEIR TYPICAL REFERENCE TO CHRIST, HIS WORK AND INSTITUTIONS.

SACRIFICES AND OBLATIONS.

The distinction between sacrifices and oblations consisted in this, that in the former the thing offered was wholly or partially destroyed, as being Jehovah's only; in the latter, it was acknowledged to be His gift, and then enjoyed by the offerer. The sacrifices were divided into burnt-offerings, with the accompanying meat-offerings (meat-food in general, especially corn and flour), peace-offerings, sin-offerings, for sins committed ignorantly, and trespass-offerings, for wilful sins and for ceremonial uncleanness.

I. THE BURNT-OFFERING, or perfect sacrifice, was so called because it was wholly consumed by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering, and so, as it were, sent up to God on the wings of fire. It signified that the offerer belonged wholly to God, and that he dedicated himself soul and body to Him. Burnt-offerings were made on behalf of the whole people or by one or more individuals who must bring them of their own free will (Lev. i., vi. 8-13). Three kinds of animals, free from blemish, might be offered: (1) a young bullock of not more than three years; (2) a lamb or kid, a male of the first year; (3) turtle doves or young pigeons. Burnt-offerings were made on the following occasions, viz.:

1. The Daily Sacrifice of a yearling lamb or kid was offered at the times of the morning and evening prayer before the priest went into the tabernacle to burn incense.

2. The Sabbath Burnt-Offering was the daily sacrifice doubled (Num. xxviii. 9, 10).

3. The Burnt-Offerings at the festivals of the New Moon, the three great feasts, the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Trumpets, were generally two bullocks, a ram and seven lambs (Num. xxviii. 11; xxix. 39).

4. Private Burnt-Offerings PRESCRIBED BY THE LAW, at the consecration of priests, the purification of women, the removal of leprosy or other ceremonial uncleanness, the performance or the accidental breach of the vow of a Nazarite.

II. THE MEAT-OFFERING and the DRINK-OFFERING always accompanied the burnt-offering, for which, indeed, the meat-offering might be substituted by the poor. As the burnt-offering signified the consecration of life to God, so in the meat-offering the produce of the land was presented before Him as being His gift, with the devout acknowledgment in both cases, "Of thine own have we given thee" (1 Chron. xxix. 14).

III. THE PEACE-OFFERING was not an atoning sacrifice to make peace with God, but a joyful celebration of peace made through atoning provisions of the covenant. Jehovah, as it were, was in His House inviting the worshiper who had been reconciled and accepted to feast with Him. Only a part of the offering was burnt on the altar and was thus offered to Jehovah; the breast and the shoulder belonged to the priests, and the rest might be eaten by the worshiper.

IV. THE SIN-OFFERING was an expiatory sacrifice for sins of ignorance committed by a priest, or by any of the people. Special victims were enjoined in different cases with special ceremonies (Lev. vi. 24-30).

V. TRESPASS-OFFERINGS were for sins committed knowingly, as well as for acts of ceremonial uncleanness.

And thus in all these sacrifices and offerings, which were continued from year to year, the Jews had before their minds the great facts of their guilt and exposedness to condemnation because of their violation of God's righteous law. They were taught their inability to satisfy the demands of the law which they had broken, and, above all, that when they deserved judgment, deliverance was graciously prepared for them by way of substitution and atonement. They were taught that it was not possible "that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins," yet these shadows intimated the substance of good things to come when the Great Deliverer, by one perfect offering, which needed no repetition, should finish the work of redemption, and for ever sit down at the right hand of God. As in the type, the blood of an innocent victim was shed, so in the case of the great Antitype, the holy and righteous One who knew no sin, who was pure and undefiled, gave His life as a ransom for the guilty, His vicarious death and sufferings atone for guilt, and thus peace with God is the portion of the believer in the Saviour. The believing Jew was permitted to eat of the peace-offering as an intimation of the fact that reconciliation and acceptance had been secured; so now the Christian is assured that, being justified by faith (Rom. v. 1), he has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

VI. OBLATIONS are not clearly distinguished from those sacrifices which were of the nature of gifts; they included incense, things vowed, first-fruits of corn, of wine, oil and wool, the first-born of man and beast, and tithes of the produce of the land.

THE SACRED SEASONS.

These fell under three heads.

I. Those connected with the Sabbath, namely:

1. The weekly Sabbath itself.
2. The Feast of the New Moon.
3. The Sabbatical Month, and the Feast of Trumpets.
4. The Sabbatical year.
6. The Year of Jubilee.

II. The three great historical festivals, namely:

1. The Passover.
2. The Feast of Pentecost.
3. The Feast of Tabernacles.

III. The Day of Atonement.

I. THE SABBATICAL SEASONS.

1. THE SABBATH is so named from a Hebrew word which signifies rest. That this was one of the primal institutions adopted by Moses from the ancient patriarchal usage is implied in the very words of the law, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The institution was not intended to promote idleness, but to prohibit work for worldly gain.

2. THE FEAST OF THE NEW MOON marked the completion of the lunar month. The first sight of her new crescent was announced by the sound of two silver trumpets (Num. x. 10).

3. THE SABBATICAL MONTH and the FEAST OF TRUMPETS. The month of Tisri, the first of the civil but the seventh of the sacred year, had a kind of Sabbatic character (Lev. xxiii. 24). The calendar was arranged so that the first day of this month fell on a Sabbath. This, the civil New Year's day, was ushered in by the blowing of trumpets, and hence was called the Feast of Trumpets. On the tenth of this month the great Day of Atonement was kept, and from the fifteenth to the twenty-second of the month the Feast of Tabernacles, the greatest of the whole year, was celebrated. All the great festivals were observed within a Sabbatic cycle of seven months.

4. THE SABBATICAL YEAR. Each seventh day, and each seventh month and each seventh year were holy. The land belonged to Jehovah, and it also had to keep its Sabbaths to Him. It was to be a season of rest and especially of great kindness to the poor. The land was not to be sown, nor the vineyards and the olive-yards dressed; no fruit or produce of any kind was to be gathered from the soil, but all was to be left to the poor, the slave and the stranger (Ex. xxiii. 10, 11). This was a "year of release," because in it creditors were bound to release poor debtors. Slaves also were to be set free (Deut. xv. 12-18). From the first the people neglected these injunctions, and it was one of the national sins which were punished by the Babylonian captivity.

5. THE YEAR OF JUBILEE occurred every fiftieth year. It completed every half century. It began on the tenth of the seventh month, the great Day of Atonement. Sacrifice being offered, the trumpet of jubilee proclaimed "liberty to the captive and the opening of the prison doors to those that were bound." The land was left uncultivated as in the Sabbatic year, and all alienated possessions returned to the families to whom they had been allotted in the first division of the holy land. The institution was based on the principle that the land was God's, who granted to each family its portion, and thus the principle was asserted that the land, the people, all belonged to God, were His servants and incapable of belonging to any one but Him; and thus the jubilee completed the great Sabbatic cycle of years at the close of which, in a limited sense, "all things were made new."

II. THE THREE GREAT HISTORICAL FESTIVALS.

Thrice in the year at these feasts all the males were required to appear before Jehovah at the tabernacle, and afterward at the temple. No age was prescribed: Jesus went up to the Passover at the age of twelve (Luke ii. 42), Samuel still younger (1 Sam. i. 24).

1. THE PASSOVER, which was the most solemn of the three festivals, as the memorial of the nation's birth and the type of Christ's death, was kept for seven days, from the evening which closed the fourteenth to the end of the twenty-first day of the first month of the sacred year, Abib or Nisan (April). Certain differences existed between the ordinance as observed in Egypt and the "Perpetual Passover." The latter was thus observed: On the fourteenth day of Nisan all leaven was put away out of their houses, and on the same day all males who were not infirm had to appear with an offering of money at the national sanctuary, according to his means (Deut. xvi. 16, 17). As the sun was setting the lambs were slain, and the fat and the blood given to the priests. The lamb was then roasted whole, and eaten with bitter herbs and unleavened bread, no portion of it being left until the morning. The same night the fat was burned by the priests after the fifteenth day had commenced, and the blood was sprinkled on the altar. On the fifteenth no work, except preparing food, was done, as it was a holy day. On the sixteenth of the month, the morrow after the Sabbath, the first sheaf of the harvest was presented and waved by the priest before the Lord, and a male lamb was offered as a burnt-sacrifice, with a meat and drink-offering. Special offerings were made during all the period, and the seventh day, the twenty-first of Nisan, appears to have been one of peculiar solemnity. Cheerfulness was to prevail during all the week, and in later years the Hallel, Psalm cxiii.-cxviii., was sung (Matt. xxvi. 30). The Passover has the profoundest and yet the clearest significance of any typical rite. Its teaching is summed up in the words, "CHRIST OUR PASSOVER IS SACRIFICED FOR US" (1 Cor. v. 7), who was in fact put to death at the very season of the Passover, as "a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 19; Isa. liii. 7; John i. 29; Acts viii. 32).

SEASONS, SACRIFICES AND OBLATIONS.

2. THE PENTECOST, or HARVEST FEAST, or FEAST OF WEEKS, was a supplement to the Passover. It lasted only one day. The people had presented, at the Passover, the first sheaf of the harvest, and thereafter had returned to their homes to gather in the crops of the year. Then they returned to keep this feast before Jehovah. It was kept fifty days after the sixteenth of Nisan, and fell about the end of May. The Pentecost was the Jewish harvest home, and the people were enjoined to rejoice before Jehovah with their families, their servants, the stranger, the fatherless and the widow, as they brought a free-will offering to the Lord (Deut. xvi. 9-12). The great feature was the presentation of two loaves made from the first-fruits of the harvest, and until these were offered none might eat of the grain newly gathered, nor could any other than first-fruits be presented to the Lord.

3. THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES, or FEAST OF INGATHERING, completed the round of annual festivals. It was a thanksgiving for the harvest and a memorial of the time when the Israelites dwelt in tents in the wilderness. It fell in the autumn, when the chief fruits of the earth, the corn, the wine and the oil, were gathered in. Its duration was strictly only seven days (Deut. xvi. 13), but it was followed by a day of holy convocation. During the seven days the Israelites were commanded to dwell in booths (tabernacles) formed of the boughs of trees.

III. THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

This was the one single fast, or day of humiliation, prescribed by the Mosaic law, whence it is called the Fast (Acts xxvii. 9). It was observed five days before the Feast of Tabernacles, and all were obliged to omit their work of every kind and to "afflict their souls" on pain of being cut off from among the people. Its ceremonies signified the humiliation of the people for all the sins of the year, and the remission of those sins by the atonement made within the veil by the high-priest, who alone performed all the sacrifices of the day (Lev. xxiii. 26-32). The victims were (1) a young bullock for a sin-offering and a ram for a burnt-offering for the high-priest himself and his family, and (2) a ram for a burnt-offering and two young goats for a sin-offering for the people. Two goats were presented at the door of the tabernacle; the high-priest cast lots on them, the one lot being inscribed "for Jehovah," the other "for Azazel." The latter was called the scape-goat. The high-priest then offered first the young bullock as the sin-offering for himself and his family. Having slain it at the altar, he took some of its blood, with a censer filled with live coals from the altar, and a handful of incense, and entering into the most holy place, he threw the incense on the coals, thus enveloping the ark in a fragrant cloud and partially shrouding it from his own eyes, lest he should die for a profanely curious gaze, and then he sprinkled the blood seven times before the mercy-seat.

The goat "of Jehovah" was then slain as a sin-offering for the people, and the high-priest again went into the most holy place and performed the same ceremonies with its blood. As he returned through the holy place, in which no one else was present, he purified it by sprinkling some of the blood of both the victims on the altar of incense. This completed the purification of the sanctuary, the second stage of the atonement. Then followed the remission of the people's sins by the ceremony of devoting the scape-goat, the one on which the lot had fallen "for Azazel." The high-priest laid his hands upon its head, and confessed over it the sins of the people, and the victim, loaded as it were with those sins, was led out by a man, chosen for the purpose, to the wilderness, into "a land not inhabited," and there let loose. The meaning of this type of the true Atonement, not by the blood of bulls or of goats, but by the precious blood of Christ Himself, is set forth in the Epistle to the Hebrews (chap. ix., x.), showing us, that, as the scape-goat typically carried away into a land of forgetfulness the sins for which atonement had been made, so our great Deliverer, on whose head we lay our burden, carries away our transgressions, and our sins are remembered no more.

IV. FESTIVALS AFTER THE CAPTIVITY.

1. THE FEAST OF PURIM, or of LOTS, was observed annually to commemorate the preservation of the Jews in Persia from the massacre to which they were devoted by Haman (Esth. ix. 24).

2. THE FEAST OF DEDICATION commemorated the purging of the temple and the rebuilding of the altar after Judas Maccabeus had driven out the Syrians, a.c. 164. It is named only once in the canonical Scriptures, John x. 22.

THE LAWS OF THE HEBREWS.

The Jewish Commonwealth was founded on a religious basis. In form, it was a monarchy, with JEHOVAH for its unseen king; but in its substance, it was a commonwealth, in the strictest sense; the people enjoying equal rights, being all the children of God and united together as brethren.

On leaving Egypt, and in the first stage of their history, the Jews could scarcely be called a nation in the political sense of the term; they were a body of tribes, the main bond of union being the "promise given to the fathers." Each of these tribes had its own patriarchal government by the "princes" of the tribe and the "heads" of the respective families, but as yet no central government existed. In the second stage of their history, the constitution was essentially the same: Jehovah was their sovereign, and the laws that He had given to them were to be obeyed; the Judges were local and special deliverers raised up in seasons of great national need and distress. In process of time a king was demanded, and a social state longed for that would unify the people and consolidate them as a nation; the reign of Saul was an experiment in which the self-will of the king was constantly asserting itself against the will of Jehovah; the accession of David marks the establishment of the true Hebrew monarchy.

The political law of the kingdom was summed up in the one great duty of governing according to the law of God. The Princes of the Congregation, or the heads of tribes, seem to have always retained a certain power in the state. The chief provisions of the civil law of Moses may thus be classified:

1. The Law of Persons. The power of a father was held to be sacred over his children (Ex. xxi. 15-17). The first-born was to have a double portion of the father's inheritance. In default of sons, property might pass to daughters, if they married in their own tribe. The wife could never become independent of her husband. The laws of service and servitude—Ex. xxi. 1-6, 20; Lev. xxv. 10, 45, 46.

2. The Law of Things. The land belonged to God, and its holders were merely His tenants. At the jubilee all land that had been sold or alienated returned to the original owners. A house might be redeemed in a year, and if not then redeemed the title was lost, except in the case of Levites' houses. Debts were released at the seventh year, and tithes of all produce were required to be given for the support of the Levites.

3. In the Criminal law, the offences against God were specified in the first four commandments. Idolatry, witchcraft, blasphemy and Sabbath-breaking were severely condemned (Num. xv. 32-36). Offences against man are summed up in the other commandments: in the fifth (the commandment with promise), respect and regard for parents are enjoined; in the sixth, murder, cruelty and violence are forbidden; in the seventh, licentiousness is condemned, while the eighth forbids theft, purloining or perversion of justice; the ninth denounces false witness and untruthfulness, and the tenth condemns the sin of covetousness and all lusting after that which belongs to others.

THE PARABLES OF OUR LORD.

From the time indicated by Matt. xiii., Parables enter largely into our LORD'S teaching. Many of them may have been repeated more than once with certain variations, as, e.g., those of the Pounds and the Talents, Matt. xxv. 14, Luke xix. 12; of the Supper, in Matt. xxii. 2, and Luke xiv. 16. There is an obvious order and object in those which the Evangelists have recorded, and their meaning will be better understood by studying in the class to which from their character they naturally belong.

For instance, there is a group which have for their subject the laws of the Divine kingdom, in its nature, growth and consummation. Under this head may be placed: THE SOWER, Matt. xiii., Mark iv., Luke viii.; THE WHEAT AND THE TARES, Matt. xiii.; THE MUSTARD-SEED, Matt. xiii., Mark iv.; THE SEED CAST INTO THE GROUND, Mark iv.; THE LEAVEN, Matt. xiii.; THE HID TREASURE, Matt. xiii.; THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, Matt. xiii.; THE NET CAST INTO THE SEA, Matt. xiii.

The next group are of a different character. They occur chiefly between the mission of the Seventy and the last approach to Jerusalem. They are drawn from the life of men rather than from the kingdom of nature, and they are chiefly delivered in reply to questions. They are such as these: THE TWO DEBTORS, Luke vii.; THE MERCILESS SERVANT, Matt. xviii.; THE GOOD SAMARITAN, Luke x.; THE FRIEND AT MIDNIGHT, Luke xi.; THE RICH FOOL, Luke xii.;

THE WEDDING-FEAST, Luke xii.; THE FIG TREE, Luke xiii.; THE GREAT SUPPER, Luke xiv.; THE LOST SHEEP, Matt. xviii., Luke xv.; THE LOST PIECE OF MONEY, Luke xv.; THE PRODIGAL SON, Luke xvi.; THE UNJUST STEWARD, Luke xv.; THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS, Luke xvi.; THE UNJUST JUDGE, Luke xviii.; THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN, Luke xviii.; THE LABORERS IN THE VINEYARD, Matt. xx.

Toward the close of our LORD'S ministry, before and after His entry into Jerusalem, the Parables assume a new character. They are Theocratic, but the phase on which they dwell is that of the final consummation of the kingdom. In part, they are prophetic of the rejection of Israel; in part, of the great retribution at the Coming of our LORD. They are to the earlier parables what the prophecy of Matt. xxiv. is to the Sermon on the Mount. To this class may be referred: THE POUNDS, Luke xix.; THE TWO SONS, Matt. xxi.; THE VINEYARD LET OUT TO HUSBANDMEN, Matt. xxi., Mark xii., Luke xx.; THE MARRIAGE-FEAST, Matt. xxii.; THE WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS, Matt. xxv.; THE TALENTS, Matt. xxv.; THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS, Matt. xxv.

NOTE.—The Table on page 36 presents the Parables of JESUS CHRIST our LORD in their chronological order, with the lesson we should learn from each; the above classification will be found exceedingly useful in studying the Parables in their connection with, and bearing upon, each other.

RELIGIOUS SECTS AND POLITICAL FACTIONS

DURING OUR LORD'S MINISTRY.

RELIGIOUS SECTS, THEIR FOUNDERS AND TENETS.

AFTER the spirit of prophecy ceased, and there were no inspired persons to settle disputes in religious matters among the Jews, different opinions soon sprang up and divided them into various sects and parties. The chief of these were the Pharisees, the Sadducees and the Essenes. These sects are generally believed to have arisen after the Babylonish captivity, and they differed in the following particulars. The Zaddikim gave themselves to the study of the Scriptures; the Chasidim studied how to add to the Scriptures. The former professed a desire to conform to the law; the latter would be above the law, voluntarily adding to what the law required. These persons speedily fell into two sects, with broadly marked distinctions.

I. THE PHARISEES

PROBABLY derived their name from the Hebrew word perushim, in Syriac pherishai, which signifies persons who are separated from others. They assumed this name because they claimed a more than ordinary sanctity (Acts xxvi. 5). Josephus tells us that they boasted that they were the favorites of heaven, and they held that God was in strict justice bound to bless and make them partakers of the terrestrial kingdom of the Messiah, and to crown them with eternal happiness. Pharisaism rose gradually, but it was consolidated as a sect at least two hundred years before the Advent.

The great body of the populace were attracted to the sect because of their outward sanctity, their zeal and their assumption of superiority. In doctrine they held a mixture of fatalism and liberty. They believed in angels, in the existence of human spirits, in immortality and in a species of resurrection of the good, or rather in a transmigration similar to the system of Pythagoras. Above all they were noted for the manner in which they placed the traditions of the elders not only on a level with the law of God, but often above it, and thus by their explanations and refinements they made the commandment of God of none effect (Matt. xv. 6). They affected great austerity and external mortification, but there was an ostentation, self-conceit and hypocrisy in all that they did. They made long prayers and gave alms "to be seen of men." They were scrupulous in observing fasts and ordinances, washing of hands, cups and vessels, while they neglected "the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith" (Matt. xxiii. 23; Luke xviii. 11, 12). They affected a peculiar dress—long robes, deep fringes and broad phylacteries—and yet they sought the chief seats in the synagogues, and to be honored in the market places, thus showing their pride, selfishness and arrogance, even while they professed themselves to be engaged in the service of Jehovah. Hence the terrible denunciations and warnings of our Lord (Matt. xxiii.; Mark xii.; Luke xi.), in which he exposes their character and prepares them for the judgment that awaited them.

II. THE SADDUCEES

APPEAR to have derived their name from Sadock, a pupil of Antigonus Sochoeus, president of the great Sanhedrim, about two hundred and sixty years before Christ. He enjoined his pupils to serve God from pure love, and not from fear nor from hope of reward. Sadock, misunderstanding or perverting his master's tenets, taught that there was no future state of rewards and punishments, and the Sadducees held that "there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit" (Matt. xxiii. 23; Acts xxiii. 8), and that the soul perishes with the body. They rejected all traditions, professing to receive only the letter of Scripture, and mainly accepting the books of Moses. They denied a superintending providence, holding that man had an absolute liberty to shape his life as he pleased, and that prosperity or adversity was entirely in his own hands, being simply the result of his wisdom or his folly. In numbers the Sadducees were inconsiderable, but the opulent and the elevated classes were often found in their ranks, and all who simply expected to find happiness or even existence in this life.

III. THE ESSENES

PROBABLY derived their name from a Syriac word which signifies to heal or cure, not because they studied medicine, but because they gave heed to the diseases of the soul. They appear to have been divided into two parties, one of them being called by PHILO practical Essenes. They engaged in husbandry and mechanical arts. Both classes were abstemious in their food, living on coarse fare and drinking water only. Their houses were mean, and so also was their raiment, which they never changed till worn out. They eschewed all ornaments and neatness in dress. They lived in societies, and had all their goods in common. Avoiding extravagance, they were moral in outward character and rigid in their observance of the Sabbath. They believed in the immortality of the soul—rejecting a resurrection—the existence of angels, a future state of rewards and punishments, and that all things followed by an eternal fatality or chain of necessary causes.

It is not known when this sect arose. Paul is held to refer to them (Col. ii. 18, 21, 23) where he speaks of "a voluntary humility," and "neglecting of the body." They had some peculiar views respecting angelic beings, and they were noted for their custom of swearing all who entered into their fellowship, to "keep and observe the books of the sect and the names of the angels with care." The dogmas also to which Paul adverts in his words "touch not, taste not, handle not," are such as the Essenes held. They would not taste any pleasant food, but lived on coarse bread, drank nothing but water, and many of them would not eat until after sunset, while if they were touched by any not of their own sect, they would wash as if they had been polluted.

POLITICAL FACTIONS, THEIR FOUNDERS AND OBJECTS.

I. THE SAMARITANS

WERE the descendants of the heathen colonists settled in Israel at the time of the captivity. Originally they were heathen, but gradually they became acquainted with the system of the Jews. When Nehemiah attempted a reformation of the Church, a priest, Manasseh, fled to Samaria, and his father-in-law, Sanballat, the governor, erected a temple, in which he ministered. To this temple disorderly Jews who would not be reformed continued to go, and thus, while the priests in Jerusalem were annoyed, the population was augmented in Samaria who professed the true God. Idolatry was therefore largely abandoned, and the descendants of that mixed population held tenaciously to the services of their Samaritan temple. The enmity never died out which was caused by the refusal of the Jews to allow the heathen colonists to aid in reconstructing the temple at Jerusalem, and this feeling was intensified by the fact that when the Jews were in peace and safety their favor was sought by the Samaritans, but when the savage assaults of Antiochus Epiphanes threatened the destruction of the nation, their northern neighbors were ready to renounce their faith, and to disavow all their desired alliances, even going so far as to offer to dedicate their temple on Mount Gerizim to Jupiter Olympius. Hence, it was the highest term of reproach among the Jews, to call a person a Samaritan (John viii. 48), and so great was their animosity that they would neither ask nor receive favors from each other (John iv. 9).

Around the site of their ruined temple a wretched bandful still continues to rally, where they observe a peculiar form of sacrifice. At Nabulus they have a synagogue, and they boast of having an ancient manuscript copy of the Pentateuch three thousand five hundred years old.

II. THE HERODIANS

WERE distinguished from the other Jews, by concurring in the scheme of Herod to submit himself and his dominions to the Romans. They apprehended that the Roman power would be irresistible, and that a wise if not a selfish policy was to cultivate the favor of the Roman emperors. They joined in the policy of Herod in erecting temples with images for idolatrous worship, in building theatres and instituting pagan games, and in all these they were opposed to the Pharisees, who held it was unlawful to pay taxes to the Roman emperor. In doctrine they are believed to have been Sadducean, for that which by one Evangelist is called the leaven of Herod (Mark viii. 15) is by another (Matt. xvi. 6) styled "the leaven of the Sadducees."

III. THE GALILEANS OR GAULONITES

WERE a faction headed by Judas the Galilean, or Gaulonite, against the Roman power, when Augustus levied a tax on Judea and reduced it to the form of a Roman province. He proclaimed that tribute was due to God alone, and therefore should not be paid to the Romans, that religious liberty should be asserted, and that the divine laws were to be defended by force of arms. This party was soon suppressed, and it is probable that a reference is made to it, in the allusion to those whom Pilate slew, and whose blood had been mingled with their sacrifices.

IV. THE ZEALOTS,

Of whom so much mention is made in the account of the Jewish wars by Josephus, were probably in league with the Galileans, and LAMY holds that the Just Men, whom the Pharisees and Herodians sent to entangle our Lord in his conversation (Matt. xxii. 15, 16; Mark xii. 13, 14; Luke xx. 20), were members of this political party.

V. THE SICARII,

RENDERED murderers in Acts xxi. 38, were really a band of assassins who derived their name from their using poniards like the Roman Sica. These they concealed in their garments, and, like the Indian thugs, they used them in secret, to slay their victims. They appear to have been under the lead of an Egyptian impostor.

THE PERIOD BETWEEN THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

JEWISH HISTORY FROM SECULAR SOURCES.

JUDEA continued subject to the kings of Persia about two hundred years, but does not appear to have had a separate governor after Nehemiah. It was annexed to the province of Syria, and the administration of its affairs was left to the high-priest, subject to the control of the provincial rulers. This raised the high-priesthood to a degree of temporal dignity and power which very soon made it an object of ambition to the different members of the family of Aaron, and gave rise to many violent and disgraceful contests among them for the office.

Upon the overthrow of the Persian army by Alexander, Syria and the neighboring countries fell under his power, and Tyre was taken after an obstinate resistance. Alexander then marched into Judea to punish the Jews, who, as faithful subjects of the king of Persia, had sent the Tyrians supplies of provisions, and refused them to him. But it is related that, as he approached Jerusalem, and saw a procession of the people clothed in white coming to meet him, headed by Jaddua the high-priest, and all the priestly race, in their robes of office, his heart was turned to spare and favor them. He continued to them the free enjoyment of their laws and religion, and exempted them from tribute during their sabbatical years; and when he built the city of Alexandria, he placed a great number of Jews there, and gave to them the same privileges as to his Greek subjects.

After the death of Alexander and the division of his empire among his generals, Judea became a subject of contention between the kings of Syria and Egypt, which ended in its forming for a time part of the monarchy of Egypt. Ptolemy Soter, the king of Egypt, brought many thousands of the Jews into that country, settled them there and treated them kindly, placing them on an equality with the Greeks at Alexandria. Greek being the common language of that city, it was quickly learned by the Jewish settlers, and became the native language of their children who were born there, and who on that account, in process of time, were called Hellenists, or Grecian Jews, a name which afterward came to be applied generally to all Jews speaking the Greek language in foreign countries (see Acts vi. 1; ix. 29; xi. 20, etc.). These Grecian Jews had synagogues in Alexandria, in which the writings of Moses and of the prophets, translated into Greek for this purpose, were read every sabbath day. This translation, which is called the Septuagint, contributed much to spread the knowledge of true religion through the western part of the world. It came into common use among the Jews, and the quotations made from the Old Testament Scriptures in the New, by the evangelists and apostles, are often, though not always, from this version.

Seleucus, king of Syria, about 300 B. C., built numerous cities in Syria and Asia Minor, and regarding the Jews as good and faithful citizens, endeavored to attract them to his new cities by the offer of the same privileges as were enjoyed by the Greeks and Macedonians. They accordingly settled there in great numbers, especially at Antioch in Syria.

It is worthy of notice that by these events the Jews were brought into contact with a new form of heathenism. They had already encountered its more ancient and more barbarous forms during their sojourns in Egypt and in Babylon, the headquarters and central seats of idolatry in their days. But now, by their dispersion in Egypt, and the other countries bordering on the eastern end of the Mediterranean, they were everywhere brought into contact with the more cultivated and refined mythology and philosophy of the Greeks; and there are good grounds for believing that they were the means of communicating to the more candid and teachable among them some knowledge of a purer religion.

During the reign of Ptolemy Soter the prosperity of the Jews was much promoted by the internal administration of an excellent high-priest, Simon the Just. He repaired and fortified their city and temple, and made a spacious reservoir of water, "in compass as a sea."

After the Jewish nation had been tributary to the kings of Egypt for about eighty years, it became, by the conquest of Antiochus the Great, subject to the kings of Syria, but the Jews were still governed by their own laws, under the high-priest and council of the nation.

Judea, being situated between Syria and Egypt, suffered much during the whole of this period from the frequent wars in which those countries were engaged, and was the arena of many bloody and destructive battles. Besides this, the peace of the nation was greatly disturbed by the claims of rival candidates to the office of high-priest, which afforded to the kings of Syria frequent pretexts for interfering with the internal affairs of the nation. And all these evils were considerably aggravated by the corruption and misconduct of the chief men, and the increasing wickedness of the people, who began to neglect the worship and the law of God far more than they had ever done since their return from the captivity.

God saw fit to punish the Jews for this defection by the hand of Antiochus Epiphanes, who came with an army and plundered the city and temple of Jerusalem with every conceivable circumstance of cruelty and profanation. For three years and a half they were altogether deprived of their civil and religious liberties. The daily sacrifice was suspended; the temple itself was dedicated by Antiochus to Jupiter Olympius, whose statue was erected on the altar of burnt offering; the worship of Jehovah and the observance of his law were prohibited under the severest penalties; every copy of the sacred writings that could be seized was burned; and the people were required, under pain of death, to sacrifice to idols. Never before had the Jews been exposed to so furious a persecution. The apostates were numerous, but a remnant continued faithful; and these events were doubtless useful in calling the attention of the heathen around to those great principles for which many of the Jews were willing to peril their lives.

At length, God raised up a deliverer for his people in the noble family of the Asamoneans. Mattathias, a priest eminent for his piety and resolution, and the father of five sons, encouraged the people, by his example and exhortations, "to stand up for the law," and having collected around him a large number of faithful men, he undertook to deliver his people, and to restore the worship of the God of Israel. But being very old when he engaged in this arduous work, he did not live to see its completion. At his death his eldest son Judas succeeded to the command of the army, in which he was greatly assisted by his brother Simon, a man of remarkable prudence. The motto on his standard was Exod. xv. 11: "Who is like unto thee among the gods, O Jehovah?" the Hebrew words being, Mi Camoka Baalim Jehovah: and from the initial letters of these words, M C B I, is said to be derived the word Maccabi or Maccabee, which became the surname of the family.

After several victories over the troops of Antiochus, Judas Maccabæus gained possession of Jerusalem; and his first care was to repair and purify the temple for the restoration of the Divine worship. This reconsecration of the temple and revival of its worship was ever after celebrated by an annual feast of eight days. It occurred at the time of the winter solstice (165 B. C.), and was called the Feast of the Dedication (John x. 22).

The war was carried on for twenty-six years, with five successive kings of Syria, and after many sanguinary battles the Syrians were driven out of the country, and the Jews, under their Maccabean princes, regained for a time their independence and the free exercise of their religion, which they commemorated by commencing a new epoch in 143 B. C. as the year of "the freedom of Jerusalem." They had again regular troops, strong garrisons and alliances with other powers, including even Rome, and the boundaries of the state were extended by the subjugation of the Idumeans and Philistines, as well as of Moab, Ammon and Arabia Petrea. Previously to this, in the year 153 B. C., as the Asamonean family were descended from the eldest branch of the race of Aaron, the office of high-priest was assumed by Jonathan, the then reigning prince, and it remained in the family until the usurpation of Herod.

This season of prosperity was, however, of short duration. The nation was exceedingly troubled by internal dissensions, especially on the part of the Pharisees, who first appear prominently in history in the reign of John Hyrcanus, as forming a large and powerful body, of turbulent character and lofty pretensions, and carrying on fierce quarrels with the rival sect of the Sadducees, which led upon one occasion to a dreadful civil war. There were also violent contests for the throne between rival members of the royal family, which greatly weakened the nation, and it was ill-prepared to withstand the extending power of Rome, which in the year 63 B. C. subjugated Syria, and soon afterward conquered Egypt. In the year 63 B. C. Pompey marched his army into Judea, besieged and took Jerusalem and made the country tributary to the Romans, though it was still governed by the Maccabean princes. During the reigns of the later princes of this family, Herod Antipater, an Idumean by birth, obtained a position of power and influence in the land, and after his death, his son, Herod the Great, so ingratiated himself with the Romans that he obtained the appointment of king of Judea in the place of Antigonus. He had, however, some difficulty in obtaining possession of his kingdom, as the people were greatly attached to their Maccabean kings. But he came against Jerusalem with a Roman army of 60,000 men, and, after a siege of above half a year, took the city by storm, and massacred many of the inhabitants. Shortly afterward he put to death Antigonus, and thus ended the Asamonean dynasty, after it had subsisted a hundred and twenty-five years.

Herod was a man of great abilities and of indomitable resolution, but an ambitious and cruel tyrant, unscrupulous as to the means by which he gained his ends. He persecuted to death all the members and adherents of the Asamonean house, and he even put to death his wife and two of his own sons. He degraded the high-priesthood by making the tenure of the office dependent on his own pleasure. In order to gain popularity with his subjects, as well as to increase his own fame, he greatly enlarged and beautified the temple at Jerusalem, making it, in some respects, more magnificent than that of Solomon. He also erected in neighboring cities many heathen temples, and constructed numerous public works, such as bridges, roads, baths, aqueducts and harbors, the cost of which he defrayed by heavy exactions upon his subjects.

In the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Herod, while Augustus was emperor of Rome, THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD WAS BORN.

Herod was succeeded in the government of the greater part of Palestine by his son Archelaus, who acted with great cruelty and injustice, and in the tenth year of his reign, upon a complaint being made against him by the Jews, he was banished by Augustus to Vienne, in Gaul, where he died. Publius Sulpitius Quirinus (who is called in Greek Cyprenias, Luke ii. 2), the president of Syria, was then sent to reduce the countries over which Archelaus had reigned to a Roman province, and a governor of Judea was appointed under the title of Procurator, subordinate to the president of Syria. But the Jews were still permitted to exercise their religious worship without molestation or restraint.

Meanwhile, in the Gentile world, the old systems of idolatry had fallen into disrepute, partly through the extreme corruptions of worship and of morals connected with them, and partly through the cultivation of Grecian philosophy, the conflicting theories of which, however, utterly failed to satisfy the wants of mankind, as they afforded little solid truth and produced no moral renovation. At the same time, the universal prevalence of the Roman power, ensuring internal peace and facilitating communication between different parts of the world, together with its indifference to the various forms of religious belief and worship, opened, for a time, a wider field for the diffusion of the gospel. So that Providence combined with prophecy to mark this as the "fulness of time," when the expected SAVIOUR should come into the world.

AN INTRODUCTION

TO THE

RIGHT UNDERSTANDING OF THE ORACLES OF GOD.

OF THE DIVINE AUTHORITY OF THE SCRIPTURES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT.

No man, who is an unbiassed free thinker, can soberly hearken to the dictates of his natural reason, and seriously ponder the absurd and contradictory principles and practices which have been or are prevalent among mankind, without perceiving that the light, or even the law of nature, is altogether insufficient to direct us to true holiness, or lasting happiness, in our present lapsed condition. It can give us no plain, distinct, convincing, pleasant, powerful, and lasting ideas of God. It cannot direct us in the right manner of worshipping him with due love, resignation, humility, self-denial, zeal, wisdom, sincerity, and fervent desire of the eternal enjoyment of him. It cannot show us our true happiness, which is suited to our highest powers, which may always be enjoyed without shame, suspicion, fear, or dread of loss or danger, and which will in every situation support and comfort us. It can discover no true system of morality, perfect in its rules, means, and motives. It can discover no effectual incitements to virtue, drawn from the excellency and presence of God the lawgiver, from the authority of his law, or from his discovering a proper regard to it in rewarding virtue and punishing vice. It cannot manifest in a striking manner the certainty, excellence, pleasure, and allurements of virtue or of future reward, nor carry us to that proper pitch of religion and virtue in our heart, which will ripen us for the full and immediate enjoyment of God. It cannot show us one perfect example of virtue, either among learned or unlearned heathens; nor give us any promise of God's assisting us in the study of it. It can discover no certainty that God will pardon our sins,—no proper atonement,—no actually pardoned sinner,—no happy soul, praising God for his pardoning mercy,—no spiritual worship,—appointed by God for rebellious sinners,—no purpose, promise, perfection, or name of God, that can secure his pardon;—nor does it give us any hint that it could consist with his honour, or is intended in his patient bearing with sinners on earth;—nor does it afford any divine proclamation of pardon, nor even any incitement to us to forgive our injurers;—and, in fine, it cannot effectually sanctify our heart, nor produce that bent of will and affection, that inward peace with God, that sufficiency of light and strength from God, or that solid hope of eternal happiness, which is necessary to produce true holiness and virtue. It cannot support us under heavy and bitter afflictions, by showing us God's fatherly care of us, his promises to us, or his making all things to work together for our good,—nor can it comfort us against death by certain views of his love to us, and providing everlasting life and happiness for us. While reason, then, plainly suggests the possibility, the desirableness, and the necessity of a revelation from God, adapted to our circumstances, the books of the Old and New Testament manifest themselves reasonable, credible, and divinely inspired: It is their DIVINE INSPIRATION (which indeed supposes them reasonable and credible) that we now attempt to demonstrate. In what manner the influence, by which the penmen of the Scriptures were directed, affected them, we pretend not fully to explain. It is enough for us to know, that thereby they were infallibly guided and determined to declare what they did not formerly know; to conceive properly of what they had formerly known; and to express their subject in terms absolutely just in themselves, and calculated to convey the truths represented to others. But so far we may conclude, that, while the penmen exercised their own reason and judgment, Ps. 45. 1; Mar. 12. 36; Lu. 1. 3; Ac. 1. 1; 1 Pe. 1. 11, the Holy Ghost (1) Effectually stirred them up to write, 2 Pe. 1. 21. (2) Appointed to each his proper share or subject correspondent with his natural talents, and the necessities of the church in his time, Mat. 25. 15; 2 Pe. 1. 21. (3) Enlightened their minds, and gave them a duly distinct view of the truths which they were to deliver, Je. 1. 11-16; 13. 9-14; Eze. 4. 4-8; Da. 10. 1, 14; 9. 22-27; 8. 15-19; 12. 8; Am. 7. 7, 8; 8. 2; Zec. 1. 19, 21; 4. 11-14; 5. 6; Jn. 16. 13; Ep. 3. 3, 4; 1 Pe. 1. 10, 11. Perhaps this illumination was given all at once to Paul, when caught up to the third heaven, but was bestowed gradually on the other apostles, Mar. 4. 34; Lu. 24. 17, 45; Jn. 20. 22; Ac. 2. 4; 10. 9-15, 28, 34. (4) He strengthened and refreshed their memories to recollect whatever they had seen or heard, which he judged proper to be inserted in their writings, Je. 31. 3; Lu. 1. 3; Jn. 14. 26. (5) Amidst a multitude of facts, he directed them to write precisely what was proper for the edification of the church, and neither more nor less, Jn. 20. 30, 31; 21. 25; Ro. 4. 23, 24; 15. 4; 1 Co. 10. 6-11. (6) He excited in their minds such images and ideas as had been treasured up in their memories, and directed them to other ends and purposes than themselves would ever have done of their own accord. Thus, under inspiration, Amos draws his figures from herds, flocks, and fields; Paul makes use of his classical learning, Am. i. ix.; Ac. 17. 23; 1 Co. 15. 33; Tit. 1. 12. (7) He immediately suggested and imprinted on their minds such things as could not be known by reason, observation, or information, but were matters of pure revelation, Is. 46. 9, 10; 41. 22, 23; 45. 21; whether they respected doctrines, 1 Ti. 3. 16; or facts past or future, Ge. 1. 2, 3; Le. xxvi., &c. (8) He so superintended every particular writer, as to spiritually guide him in his matter, words, and arrangement; and, by this superintending influence, made them all in connection so write, as to render the whole Scripture, at any given period, a sufficient blessed rule to direct men to true holiness and everlasting happiness, De. 8. 4; Ps. 1. 2; 19. 7-11; 119. 105; Mat. 22. 29; Lu. 16. 29, 31; Jn. 5. 39; Ro. 15. 4; 2 Ti. 3. 15-17; 2 Pe. 1. 19. Many of the sentences recorded in Scripture are not inspired in themselves, being the words of Satan or of wicked men; but the Scripture report relative to these expressions is directed by divine inspiration.—That our books of the Old and New Testament, the APOCRYPHAL TRACTS being excluded from both, are of an INSPIRED and DIVINE original, is thus evident.

I. The subject MATTER of them requires a divine inspiration. The history of the creation, and part of that of the flood, &c., therein related, were known only to God. Mysteries relative to the Trinity of persons in the Godhead; the promise of grace: the incarnation of the Son of God; his undertaking offices, and states, and our union with him; justification, adoption, sanctification, spiritual comfort, and eternal blessedness, in him, are therein declared;—which God only could comprehend or discover. The nature of religion therein prescribed is so pure and benevolent, that God alone could devise or appoint it. While it represents the Most High as everywhere present—as infinitely perfect, powerful, wise, and good—holy, just, and true—an infinitely gracious lover of righteousness and hater of iniquity,—as our bountiful Creator and Preserver, and as the infinitely merciful Redeemer of our souls, by the obedience and death of his only-begotten Son,—it requires us to know, believe in, and revere him with our whole heart, soul, mind, and strength, as our Father, Friend, Husband, Saviour, and Portion in Christ; and confidently to depend on him, and ask from him whatever we need in time or eternity; and to obey him in all that he commands, as children whom he hath begotten again to a lively hope, and established as the heirs of an everlasting inheritance. We are here taught how human nature may be truly improved and perfected, by our receiving Jesus Christ as made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption,—as an effectual principle and root of true holiness;—and by our walking in him by faith, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, patiently, contentedly, and cheerfully,—setting our affections upon things above, where Christ is, and through the Spirit mortifying every sinful and selfish inclination. We are taught to love our neighbours as ourselves, perfectly fulfilling the particular duties of every relative station; and to lay aside all malice, envy, hatred, revenge, or other malevolent dispositions or passions; to love our enemies; to render good for evil, blessing for cursing; and to pray for them that despitefully use us. These laws of universal purity and benevolence are prescribed with an authority proper only to God, and extended to such a compass and degree as God alone can demand: and those sins are forbidden which God alone can observe or prohibit. The most powerful motives to duty, and dissuaves from vice, are here most wisely proposed, and powerfully urged,—motives drawn from the nature, the promises, the threatenings, the mercies, and the judgments of God; particularly from his kindness in the work of our redemption, and his blessed relations to us in Christ; and from advantages or disadvantages, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. And while the most excellent means of directing and exciting to, and of exercising piety and virtue, are established in the most prudent forms and authoritative manner, the most perfect and engaging patterns of holiness and virtue are set before us in the example of Jesus Christ our Redeemer, and of God as reconciled in him, and reconciling the world to himself, Ex. 20. 1–17; Le. xviii. –xx.; De. iv. –xxv.; Mat. v. –vii.; Ro. vi. xii. –xv.; Ga. v. vi.; Ep. iv. –vi.; Col. iii. iv.; 1 Th. v.; Tit. ii.; Ja. i. –v.; 1 Pe. i. –v.; 2 Pe. i.; 1 Jn. i. –v., &c. &c.

II. The MANNER in which these subjects are exhibited in the Scriptures is evidently divine;—wise, condescending, and yet majestic. The discoveries have been gradual, as men stood in need of them or were in a proper condition to receive them, Ge. iii. ix. xii. xvii., &c.; He. 1. 1. The principal points,—as of God's manifestation of himself to sinful men; his full satisfaction in and with Christ as our Mediator; and the law of the ten commandments,—were declared from heaven with uncommon solemnity, Mat. 3. 17; 17. 5; Ex. 20. 1–18, &c. And while these and other similar truths are announced in a style the most plain and simple, there appears therein something astonishingly sublime and majestic. While the dictates are authorized with a THUS SAITH THE LORD, the very style, particularly in Scripture songs, Job, Psalms, Lamentations, and Isaiah, and in our Saviour's discourses, &c., is at once surprisingly suited to the dignity of the Author, the nature of the subject, and the condition of the persons addressed.

III. The manifest SCOPE of the Scriptures is to render sin loathsome and hated, and to promote holiness and virtue; to humble men, and reform them from their beloved lusts and sinful practices; and to exalt and glorify God to the highest. No good angel or man could dare to personate God in the manner of the Scriptures; nor could bad angels or men publish, and so warmly inculcate, what is so remarkably contrary to their own vicious inclinations and honour. It therefore remains that God alone must be the author and inditer of them.

IV. Notwithstanding the dictates of Scripture are so extremely contrary to the natural inclinations of mankind, and were published without any concert by various persons, of very different conditions, and in different ages and places, yet such is the marvellous HARMONY of all the parts, in their whole matter and scope, as irrefragably demonstrates that these penmen must all have been directed by the same Spirit of God. One part of our Bible is so connected with, and tends to the establishment of another, that we cannot reasonably receive any part without receiving the whole. In the New Testament we have the historical narrative of the fulfilment of the typical and verbal predictions of the Old. In both Testaments the subsequent books, or subsequent parts of a book, are connected with that which went before, as a narrative of the execution of a scheme begun, or of the fulfilment of a prophecy declared. If we receive the history, we must also receive the prediction. If we admit the prediction, we must believe the history. To a diligent searcher of the Scriptures, it cannot fail to occasion a most pleasant astonishment to find everywhere the same facts supposed, related, or prepared for; the same doctrines of a gracious redemption through Jesus Christ exhibited, or supposed to be true; the same rules or exemplifications of piety and virtue, and motives thereto; the same promises of mercy, or threatenings of just misery, to persons, societies, or nations, exhibited without a single contradiction. When there is an appearance of contradiction, it will be found that the different passages do not respect the same thing or person, in the same respect, and in the same circumstances of time, place, or manner; and so there is no contradiction at all.

V. The manifest CHARACTER OF THE PENMEN further evinces the divine original of the Scriptures. They everywhere discover the utmost candour and disinterestedness: they everywhere candidly publish the infirmities or even faults of themselves, their friends, and nation. None of them ever gained anything in this world by their work but trouble and vexation; and, according to their own principles, they could obtain nothing in the next but everlasting destruction, if they indulged themselves in any imposture. The matter and manner of their work infinitely transcended their abilities. Setting their predictions aside for a moment, how could men of the best education, and especially men of no education, form such exalted schemes of sense, piety, and virtue? Or how could wicked men, inspired by Satan, publish and prosecute such a scheme of mystery, holiness, and morality? Such is the character of Jesus Christ, drawn by the four evangelists, with every mark of simplicity and candour, and in which ignominious suffering is made a leading article, that the delineation thereof—and that too by persons of no uncommon knowledge—without a real and exactly answerable model, would, to every unbiassed free-thinker, appear more incredible and impossible than even the incarnation, obedience, and death of the Son of God, therein attested, however astonishing.

VI. The providence of God has, in a most marvellous manner, PRESERVED the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments from being lost or corrupted. While perhaps millions of other books, once of considerable fame in the world, and which no one sought to extirpate, are lost and forgotten, the Scriptures, though more early written, and though Satan and his agents unnumbered have hated them, and sought to cause their memory to perish from among men, or to corrupt them, still remain, and remain in their purity. In great wisdom and kindness, God, for their preservation, ordered an original copy to be laid up in the holy of holies, De. 31. 26; and that every Hebrew king should write out a copy for himself, De. 17. 18; and appointed the careful and frequent reading of them, both in private and public. With astonishing kindness and wisdom has he made the contending parties who had access to the Scriptures—such as the Jews and Israelites, the Jews and Samaritans, the Pharisees and Sadducees, the Jews and Christians, and the various parties of Christians—MUTUAL CHECKS upon each other for almost three thousand years past, that they might not be able either to extirpate or to corrupt any part of them. When the Christians had almost utterly lost the knowledge of the Hebrew originals, God, by his providence, stirred up the Jewish rabbins to an uncommon labour for preserving them in their purity, by marking the number of letters, and how often each was repeated, in their Masorah. By what tremendous judgments did he restrain and punish Antiochus Epiphanes the Syro-Grecian king, Dioclesian the Roman emperor, and others, who attempted to destroy the copies of Scripture, in order to extirpate the Jewish or Christian religion! And he has bestowed amazing support and consolation on such as have risked or parted with their lives rather than deny the dictates of Scripture, or in the least contribute to their extirpation or misinterpretation. By quickly multiplying the copies or the readers of the Scriptures, he rendered it impossible to corrupt them in anything important, without causing the corruption all at once to start up into every copy dispersed through the world, and into the memories of almost every reader;—than which nothing could be more absurd to suppose. Nay, it is observable that of all the thousands of various readings which the learned have collected, not one in the least enervates any point of our faith or duty towards God or man.

VII. Multitudes of MIRACLES, which only the infinite power of God could effect, have been wrought for the confirmation of the doctrines and facts mentioned in the Scriptures, and for evincing the divine mission of the principal publishers thereof. The wisdom and goodness of God required him, especially when in the days of Moses and Christ he was establishing a new form of worship, to mark the important declarations of his will with some distinguishing characteristics, awakening to consideration. Nothing appears more proper for this end than a series of uncontrolled miracles, which no power could check, and which supported nothing but what was agreeable to reason, so far as it could conceive of it. Neither reason nor experience can admit that the infinite wisdom and goodness of God could permit one, much less multitudes of uncontrolled miracles to be wrought for the confirmation of falsehood. But the miracles wrought in confirmation of the Scriptures have every favourable circumstance that could be wished. Their number was almost beyond reckoning, and all of them calculated to answer some great and benevolent end. According to the nature of the broken law, many of those wrought by Moses, Elijah, and Elisha were tremendous and dreadful. According to the nature of the gospel which they published, the miracles wrought by Jesus Christ and his apostles were generally of a benevolent nature and tendency. Moreover, most of the miracles mentioned in Scripture were performed in so public a manner that both friends and foes had the fullest access to a thorough examination of their nature and certainty. Most of them were wrought when the concurrent circumstances of Providence loudly called mankind to observe and examine them. Most of them—as the passage of the Hebrews through the Red Sea and through Jordan; the forty years' sustenance of the people in the Arabian desert, by manna from heaven and water from a rock; the stoppage or retrograde motion of the sun; the feeding of thousands with a few loaves and fishes; and the raising of dead persons—were of such a nature, that nothing less than absurdity itself can suppose the senses of the witnesses to have been deceived, or that any power less than divine could have produced them. Besides, all these miracles were wrought in confirmation of a religion the most holy, pure, and benevolent; and most of them by persons who were eminent patterns of virtue. And that such miracles were wrought, is in part attested by the inveterate enemies thereof, whether Jews or heathens.

VIII. The PROJECT of reforming mankind by the Scriptures, and the manifest SUCCESS thereof, is a continued miraculous proof of their divine original. What, but a certain evidence of his divine commission, could have made Moses risk his character—that on the sixth day of the week the whole Hebrew nation in the wilderness should always find manna sufficient for two days, and that the sixth year should always produce a double crop; and, on that supposition, enact a standing law, that they should never attempt to gather manna on the seventh day, or to cultivate their fields on the seventh year? Without certain assurance of divine protection from their inveterate enemies on every hand, on those occasions, could he ever have required that all the males able to walk should, three times every year, leave their homes, and assemble to keep the sacred festivals near the middle of their country? Without manifest warrant from God, could he ever have hoped that there would be a sufficiency of males in Aaron's family to execute the priesthood for all Israel, free from all those blemishes which he marks out as excluding from that office? Without this, could he ever have hoped that the small country of Canaan could afford sustenance for his numerous nation, while they were debarred from so many kinds of eatables, and were required to give yearly so much of the product to the Lord?—The PROJECT of Christianity, and its SUCCESS, are still more astonishing. Nothing less than a certain warrant and almighty influence from God could effect the one or the other. How is it possible that a few men, weak or villainous, without the smallest assistance from worldly influence, could ever form a scheme to reform the whole world from principles and practices deep-rooted in their inclination, and firmly established by extensive custom, by long-confirmed laws, and the high and universal authority of nations,—by mere declarations of what they thought true?—nay, by what they knew to be falsehood, if they were impostors! How could villains, or even the weakest, choose for their hero One who had been always condemned, and had lately been crucified between thieves as a noted malefactor, by the common consent of his own countrymen!—One who, if he was not God in our nature, had abused his disciples' confidence, and decoyed them into a train of temporal and eternal miseries!—One who had never encouraged them to hope for anything in this world, in following him, but crosses, hatred, reproach, imprisonment, tortures, and death;—nor, if they indulged themselves in a fraudulent prosecution of their cause, for anything in the future state but everlasting destruction! How stupendous, and absolutely incredible, that a few villainous projectors of reformation should begin their work, a few weeks after, in the very place where, and among the very multitude by whom, Jesus their hero had been ignominiously crucified;—and should in the most public and undaunted manner, in the face of danger and death, avow him to be the Son of God; and to have risen from the dead, ascended to heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God;—that amidst the deepest poverty, cruel hatred, calumnious reproach, and inhuman persecution from enemies, they should, with unwearied zeal and cheerfulness, carry on their project, never appearing to covet any outward honour or wealth;—and that they should form a system of doctrines and morals, infinitely superior, in sense and dignity, to all the productions of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, and other renowned doctors of the heathen world! How astonishing is it that these few preachers, without the smallest encouragement from earthly powers, should so triumph over the craft, the rage, and power of the infuriated Jews; triumph over the pride, the policy, and power of the Roman empire, when at its full strength and maturest sagacity;—over the pride of learning, and the obstinacy of ignorance, hatred, prejudice, and lust;—over the hardened inclinations, deep-rooted customs, and long-fixed laws of Jews and heathens;—and that, contrary to every temptation from outward advantage, nay, notwithstanding every conceivable form of opposition, the gospel should, within a few years after Christ's ascension, be preached in almost every corner of the Roman empire and the countries adjacent;—and that multitudes, at the hazard of every temporal loss or punishment from men, should readily believe, constantly adhere to, and cheerfully and strictly practise the same! And it is equally astonishing, that, for more than seventeen hundred years, notwithstanding innumerable persecutions, together with the wickedness of professors, and the inconceivable villanies or base indifference of the clergy, this project has been more or less successful in reforming the hearts and lives of multitudes in almost every nation of importance under heaven.

IX. Nothing more clearly demonstrates the divine authority of the Scriptures than the EXACT FULFILMENT of the typical and verbal predictions therein exhibited, in the most circumstantial manner, hundreds or thousands of years before that fulfilment took place, or there was the smallest appearance of it. Predictions (especially as above circumstantiated) necessarily imply a looking with certainty through an infinity of possible events, and seeing and declaring what shall certainly happen, and what not. Such foresight and declaration can only take place in the omniscient and almighty Governor of the world, who alone can declare the end from the beginning.—To mark the all-seeing JEHOVAH, the author of Scripture, its pages are crowded with predictions, the exact fulfilment of which is recorded in the inspired and other histories written since the events took place. Almost every historical passage in our Bible is a narrative of something antecedently foretold. The New Testament is little else than a representation of the fulfilment of the types and predictions of the Old, relative to Jesus Christ and his gospel church. Nay, the histories of churches and nations, from the beginning to the end of the world, do, to a judicious observer, represent little more than the fulfilment of Scripture predictions, as to the families of Adam and Noah; the Canaanites, Amalekites, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Egyptians, Ethiopians, Syrians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, Tartars including Goths, Huns, and Turks; and especially the Jews, Jesus Christ, the New Testament church, and Antichrist; as shall be hereafter manifested. This proof, drawn from the fulfilment of predictions, increases in evidence more and more as that fulfilment takes place, and is observed. The dispersion and misery of the Jewish nation, so long continued, or so often repeated; the progress and continuance of the gospel among the Gentiles; the long-continued dominion of the popes, and the partial revolt from it at the Reformation; the past and present condition of the Turkish empire; the present state of Assyria, Chaldea, Arabia, Phenicia, Canaan, Egypt, &c., in exact correspondence to Scripture predictions, are standing testimonies of the divine original of our Bibles, no less conclusive and striking than if we had miracles wrought every day.

X. Though the above arguments are sufficient to silence gainsayers, and to produce a rational conviction that the Scriptures are of divine original and authority, it is only the effectual application of them to our mind, conscience, and heart, in their SELF-EVIDENCING DIVINE LIGHT and POWER, which can produce a cordial and saving persuasion that they are indeed the Word of God. But, when thus applied, this word brings along with it such light, such authority, and such sanctifying and comforting power, that there is no shutting our eyes nor hardening our hearts against it; no possibility of continuing stupid and unconcerned under it: but the whole faculties of our soul are necessarily affected with it, as indeed marked with divine evidence, and attended with almighty power, 1 Th. 1.5; 2.13; Jn. 6.63.

OF RULES FOR UNDERSTANDING THE SCRIPTURES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

I. Let us labour, in much fervent prayer and supplication, for the powerful influence and inhabitation of the Holy Ghost (who perfectly understands the Scriptures, and indited and appointed them for our spiritual edification), that he may constantly interpret and apply them to our heart. He is the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ; He it is who searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God: He is the Anointing, that is Truth, and teacheth all things. He can enlighten our eyes, and make us to know the things freely given us of God, and to see wondrous things out of God's law; can make us by the Scriptures, wiser than our teachers—wise unto salvation, Ep. 1.17,18; 3.16–19; 1 Co. 2.10,12; 1 Jn. 2.20,27; Ps. 119.18,96–108; 2 Ti. 3.15–17.

II. Being renewed in the spirit of our minds, and having in us the mind of Christ, we ought, under a deep sense of God's presence and authority in the Scripture, earnestly, and with much self-denial, to search the Scriptures, by much serious reading and meditation thereon; chiefly that we may spiritually know the mind, behold the glory, and feel the gracious power of God therein, in order to our faith in and obedience to them. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: it is the man who feareth God to whom he will teach his way, and reveal the secrets of his grace;—it is the man who hath the Spirit of Christ, the mind of Christ—who hath seen the Lord, and tasted that he is gracious—the man who hath had his eyes opened, that can discern, judge of, and understand the matter or manner of Scripture revelations, 1 Jn. 2.20,27; Ps. 25.12,14; 1 Co. 2.14–16; Jn. 14.21–23; Lu. 24.45; Ps. 119.18. A deep sense of our ignorance, and of our absolute need of Scripture influence, must animate us to the earnest study of knowledge. He, who thinks that of himself he knows divine things to any purpose, knoweth nothing as he ought to know—only with the lowly wisdom. God, who resisteth the proud, giveth grace to the humble: the meek will he guide in judgment; the meek will he teach his way. The mysteries of the kingdom he hides from the self-conceited, wise, and prudent; and reveals them unto babes, 1 Co. 8.2; Pr. 11.2; Ja. 4.6; Ps. 25.9; Mat. 13.11; 11.25. Scarcely can anything tend more effectually to blind the mind, and harden the heart, than the searching of the Scriptures in a philosophical manner, regarding merely or chiefly the rational sense of the passage. Hence multitudes of preachers, who daily study the Scriptures for the sake of their external performances, are of all men the most ignorant how Christ's words are spirit and life. The god of this world blinds their minds; so that hearing many things, they never open their eyes; and seeing many things, they never behold one truth, or the subject thereof, in its glory, Is. 6.9,10; 42.18,19; 56.9; 2 Co. 4.3,4.

III. We must earnestly study to reduce all our Scriptural knowledge to practice. Not any number of the best rules can make an apprentice to understand his business so much as a considerable practice therein. When serious contemplation of Scripture and experimental feeling and practice of it meet together, true scriptural knowledge must needs be greatly enlarged and sweetened. The man that doeth Christ's will, he shall know of his doctrine whether it be of God. If God's commandments be ever with us, and be kept by us, they will render us wiser than our enemies, wiser than the ancients, or even our teachers, Jn. 7.16,17; Ps.119.98,100.

IV. In searching the Scriptures, we must proceed in an orderly manner, beginning with that which is most plain and practical, and afterwards study that which is more difficult and obscure. To recommend this method, the FIRST PART of both Testaments is chiefly HISTORICAL, plainly declaring what things had been done, and intermingled with plain directions how the more necessary duties ought to be done. Of this kind are the books of the Old Testament from GENESIS to ESTHER inclusively, and the first five books of the New. These ought carefully to be studied, as there are manifold references and allusions to that which is contained in them in the other books. Nay, even in the subsequent histories, there is frequent mention of, or allusion to, the creation; flood; deliverance from Egypt; captivity in Babylon; birth, life, and death of Christ. The SECOND PART of both Testaments, i.e. from JOB to the SONG of SOLOMON inclusively in the Old, and all the EPISTLES in the New, consist chiefly of DOCTRINAL declarations of the nature, perfections, purposes, and works of God; of the person and mediation of Jesus Christ, and the way of salvation through him; and of man in his innocent, fallen, recovered, and eternal state; mingled with commands and directions how to behave answerably to the relations and providences of God towards us; together with manifold hints of the conduct of God and the cases of his people. The LAST PART in both Testaments is chiefly PROPHEITICAL, declaring beforehand the mercies and judgments which should take place all along, till the end of the world; but intermingled with manifold charges of guilt, as the cause of the judgments threatened; and with historical hints of the circumstances or fulfilment of the predictions, and directions how to behave aright. This part, generally relating to things then future, is naturally most obscure. It is even necessary that it should be so, that the persons concerned might be induced to a careful expectation of, and preparation for, the events; and that men might be the less able to counterfeit or to attempt preventing some of them.

V. It is of great use to form in our mind a brief collection of the most plain and important histories, doctrines, laws, and predictions of Scripture, which may serve as a kind of standard and criterion for understanding of others. Thus a fixed view of the creation; the fall of man; the flood; the calling of Abraham; the fate of Joseph; the Israelites' entrance into and deliverance from Egypt; their travels in the wilderness; settlement in Canaan; change of their government by judges into that by kings; division of their kingdom into two; their captivities into Assyria and Babylon;—and of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ; and of the spread of the gospel, which followed by means of the remarkable effusion of the Holy Ghost;—will greatly contribute towards our right understanding of other historical points, and even of many predictions. We should endeavour to obtain a compendious view of the nature of God, as a Spirit, infinite, eternal, unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth; subsisting in three distinct persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and who has, in his eternal decree, given his Son to the world; and, in execution of that love, forms all things into being in creation, and preserves and governs them therein by his providence:—And of man, who, being created perfectly holy, and admitted into a state of friendship with his Maker, did, by disobedience to God, render himself and all his natural posterity sinful and miserable: that they being utterly incapable, as well as unwilling to recover themselves, God, of his love and unbounded grace and mercy, formed a new kingdom, in which his own Son was made their Mediator, Surety, Saviour, and Redeemer!—their Prophet, to instruct them; their Priest, to offer sacrifice and intercede for them; and their King, to subdue, rule, and defend them;—that in consequence of his obedience, suffering, and glorification, they may, by his Spirit, be saved from sin, justified, adopted, sanctified, comforted, and glorified;—And of the ten commandments, or of Christ's summary of them, Mat. 22. 37, 38; 7. 12. Or those scriptures commonly cited in evangelical theologies may serve as a criterion for understanding the doctrines and laws of Scripture. Such a brief summary of divine truth is the analogy or proportion of faith, Ro.12.6; is the delineation, draught, platform, pattern, or form of sound words, which ought to be held fast in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus, Ro.6.17; 2 Ti.2.13. By attention to it we may immediately discern when texts are plain or when they are figurative. Thus, if bodily members be ascribed to God, it will teach us to understand them as representing his spiritual excellencies, since God himself is a Spirit. If God be said to deceive men, or to harden them in sin, it will teach us to understand those texts only of his permitting men to be deceived and hardened by Satan and their own lusts—since God is infinitely holy. If the sacramental elements be called Christ's body and blood, it will teach us to understand them as signs and seals of his person and righteousness; but not as transubstantiated into his material body and blood,—since the heavens contain him till the end of the world, Ac. 3.21. If the Scriptures represent saints as exposed to punishments for sin, or as obtaining rewards by their gracious tempers and good works, it will teach us to consider both in that form in which saints meet with them, i.e., as secured for them by the blood of Christ, as bestowed by God's redeeming love, and suited to their state as persons indissolubly married to Christ and saved by faith in him.

VI. Not only must every text be understood in harmony with the analogy of faith, or general plan of revealed truth, but also in agreement with the plain scope and tendency of the passage, chapter, or book where it lies. This plain scope must therefore be earnestly searched out and observed in an accurate observance of the contents of each book or chapter. Thus the scope of the historical books of the Old Testament is to represent the fate of his Hebrew people; and therefore every text thereof ought to be understood in agreement with this. The scope of the Psalms is to express the saints' exercises, and to acknowledge God as blessed in himself, and the author of all blessedness to men; and in reference to these ought every text therein to be understood. The scope of the Proverbs is to teach men wisdom and discretion; of Ecclesiastes, to point out the insufficiency of all created enjoyments to render men happy; of the Song of Solomon, to exhibit the kind and familiar fellowship between Christ and his people: and therefore, in agreement with this scope, ought the several texts in each of them to be understood. The scope of the prophetic parts in both Testaments is to warn the church of her dangers on account of sins, and to encourage her hopes of preservation under, and deliverance from, the greatest tribulations. The scope of the Gospels, by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, is to exhibit Jesus Christ as the Son of God and promised Messiah, that we might believe in him to the saving of our soul.

The general scope of the Epistles is to point out our need of a Saviour, and the blessings which we receive through him; and to direct us how to improve these aright in our personal practice, relative duties, and ecclesiastical fellowship. More particularly the scope of the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians is to establish the doctrine of justification through faith in Jesus Christ, and to teach us how to improve it. The scope of those to the Corinthians is to redress contentions and disorders among church members; of those to Timothy and Titus, to direct church-officers; of that to the Hebrews, to manifest Christ's headship over the church, and his fulfilment and wise abolition of the typical ceremonies; of James, to show the vanity of pretending faith without exercising good works; of Peter and Jude, to warn their Jewish brethren of the approaching ruin of their nation, and of their duty with respect to it; of John, to comfort them in their distress, and enable them to examine themselves fully. The particular texts ought therefore always to be understood in reference to the manifest scope of each epistle, and the particular passage of it.

VII. The various texts which are similar, either in words or in signification, or even which represent a similar subject, ought to be carefully compared. On almost every subject a multitude of phrases will be found which, when compared, do amazingly illustrate and as it were support one another. The truth which is more darkly represented in one passage, is represented more clearly in others. Part of the attributes or circumstances of persons or things is so represented in one text, and part of them in another, that only by searching the several scriptures, and connecting them together in one view, can we obtain a true or just apprehension of them. In particular, the types of the Old Testament must be compared with their antitypes in the New. The predictions must be compared with the history of their fulfilment; and the passage in which the point is purposely handled ought to be chiefly attended to in the comparison, as Ge. i. on creation; Ro. iii.—v. on justification, &c.—To carry this comparison of Scripture texts, one with another, to a due extent, or a due degree of exactness, will perhaps appear very difficult; but the more it is practised it will become the more easy and pleasant. The inexpressible advantage which attends it will infinitely more than compensate the toil. Herein the serious inquirer has the Spirit of God for his director, the lively oracles of God for his commentary. He has the pleasure of discovering the truth for himself in God's own light; and the discovery which he thus makes, by humbly searching the Scriptures is inexpressibly more agreeable than merely to have met with it at random in some commentator. Being acquired by care and labour, it generally fixes itself much more firmly in the mind. And while we are thus occupied in comparing the several texts, we may humbly expect that the Holy Ghost will illuminate all with his glory, and apply all to the heart.

VIII. We ought never to content ourselves with a general view of any text, or of the words of it abstractedly considered; but should search out what is therein chiefly and emphatically intended by the Spirit of God as it stands in such a particular connection. Thus thousands of unexpected beauties will appear to our view. Never are the oracles or truths of God seen in their real and manifold glory but when they are viewed in their proper connections. The glory of redeeming grace is never justly conceived of unless it be viewed as abounding where sin had abounded—as reigning unto eternal life where sin had reigned unto death, Ps.cvi.; Eze.xvi.xx.; Ro.iii.v.; Ep.ii. Man's wickedness is never justly perceived without viewing it in connection with that God against whom, and that goodness against which, it is committed, De. xxxii.; Ro. 2. 4. Gospel holiness is never rightly understood but when viewed in connection with that state of salvation in which, the gracious principles and motives from which, the manner in which, and the end to which, it is performed. The history of typical persons or events, and the form of typical ordinances, are never properly understood but in connection with their antitypes. Never can we discern the tenderness of the grace, or the seasonableness of the mercies or judgments of God, without carefully observing the connection, when, where, and after what, the mercy or judgment happened. Nay, never are the oracles of God rightly received but when viewed in their proper connection with Jesus Christ, as the author, matter, and end of them. This connection of the sacred oracles is often contained in a small particle—AND, THEN, THEREFORE, BECAUSE, IN, BY, TO, THROUGH, &c.; and sometimes we are left to collect it from the station in which one thing is placed with another. We ought therefore not only to weigh every word of the Holy Ghost, but carefully to mark how things stand joined one with another. Thus, by observing the context, 1 Pe. 4. 18, we learn that the saving of the righteous with difficulty relates to their escaping when the Jewish nation was destroyed, not to their spiritual salvation; and that the eating doubtfully, Ro. 14. 23, relates immediately to the partaking of common meats, not to the receiving of the Lord's supper.

IX. Christ Jesus being the great subject and end of Scripture revelation, we ought everywhere to search if we can find him. The Scriptures testify of him, Jn. 5. 39. To him give all the prophets witness, Ac. 10. 43. In Moses, in the Psalms, and in the Prophets, there are things concerning him, Lu. 24. 27, 44. His name is the Word of God; and the Scripture is but the testimony of Jesus, Re. 19. 10, 13. It is but a gradual revelation of him, answerable to the counsels of God as a God of order,—answerable to the growing state of the church, and of every saint on earth. Scripture history does but exhibit man's need of Christ, and God's preparation of the world for him. Scripture genealogies do but direct to the line of Christ, and thus mark him out as the promised Messiah. Scripture chronology does but mark the seasons of Christ, the times of promise, and days of power. He is the end and fulfiller of all Scripture laws, Ro. 10. 4; Ga. 4. 24. Gospel declarations are but the exhibitions of him as the light and life of the world. In Christ all the promises are yea and amen, 2 Co. 1. 20. What then can be more absurd, more unchristian, than to overlook or to evade the discerning of Jesus Christ, especially when the description and work cannot agree to another; but, after all, we must take heed to discern him only in the manner he is really represented by the Holy Ghost, and no other. To fix spiritual meanings upon phrases which were never immediately intended by the Holy Spirit in them, is to profane the Scripture, and expose it to contempt. But where Jesus Christ and his fulness are immediately exhibited, we must conceive of them as thus exhibited. Where he is but indirectly exhibited, it is only in that manner we must apprehend him there. Where he is represented in a type, we must discern him through that type, as a medium.

X. As to the infinite mind of the Holy Ghost, every subject and every event are at once perfectly in view, his words in Scripture ought always to be understood in the fullest latitude of signification that the analogy of faith and of the context can admit. Historical hints must be understood as relating to everything similar preceding the date, unless the context restrict them. God's nourishing and bringing up children, Is. 1. 2, includes all the favours he had done for the Jewish nation from the call of Abraham, Ge. xii., to the date of the prophecy. Their rebellious against God must include all their wickedness in, and after their deliverance from Egypt, till Isaiah uttered these words. Sometimes a phrase does not only relate to both church and state, but at once represents the sinful crime and the wrathful punishment thereof. Thus, Is. 1. 5, The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint, &c., may at once denote the sinfulness of the church and nation, among all ranks, high and low, and in every person; and likewise the miserable state of both under Abaz, &c. Figures relating to the church, as in the Song of Solomon, &c., and manifold promises relating to it, ought to be applied to it as the visible mystical body of Christ; and also to every particular member of it. And these figures and promises ought to be understood in one manner when applied to the church, and in another manner when applied to a particular soul. The same promises or threatenings frequently relate to both church and state; in which case they are to be understood in one view when applied to the former, and in another view when applied to the latter. Thus most of the promises and threatenings which respect the Jewish nation are to be understood in both these views. The predictions which we have in Re. vi. viii. relate to the Christian church and to the Roman state. The predictions we have Re. 9. 1–11 relate to the power of the popes in the west, and of the Mahometans in the east. Predictions ought to be considered as fulfilled in every event posterior to their date which can correspond with their terms and context. Types, so far as they prefigure things future, must be understood in the same latitude. Thus most of the Old Testament histories are again verified in antitypes, with respect to their antitypical fulfilment. And thus the predictions relative to David, Solomon, the Jewish nation, &c., besides their immediate fulfilment on these objects, have an antitypical accomplishment in Christ and his gospel church. The prediction of the enmity between Jesus Christ and his people on the one hand, and the devil and his subjects on the other, Ge. 3. 15, has its fulfilment in all the contentions between these parties from the fall of man till the end of the world, whether in a single person or a social capacity. The prediction of trouble to mankind, particularly women, Ge. 3. 16–19, has its accomplishment in all the painful conceptions, child-birth, nursing, &c., of women;—in all their subjection to and ill usage by men;—and in all the troubles of persons, families, or nations;—in all the storms, earthquakes, bad seasons, scanty crops, &c., which happen. The prediction of Noah concerning the fate of his sons, Ge. 9. 25–27, has had its accomplishment in the fate of mankind ever since. The prediction of men's being blessed in Abraham or in his seed, Ge. 12. 3; 22. 18, has been fulfilled in his and his posterity's usefulness to render men pious or happy; but chiefly in the Gentiles' salvation through Jesus Christ; and even in the outward happiness of nations where the gospel has been received. The predictions of God's giving Canaan to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their seed, Ge. 12. 7; 13. 15, &c., was not only fulfilled in God's bringing the Hebrews into, and continuing them for many ages in, that country, but also in his bringing multitudes of believers into a gracious state, the gospel church, and the heavenly glory. The predictions of Moses, in Le. xxvi.; De. xxviii.—xxxiii., not only had their fulfilment in the diversified sinning and repenting, and in the mercies and judgments which have or shall befall the Jewish nation, but in whatever similar hath or shall befall the gospel church and the members thereof; nay, in the eternal happiness of saints and ruin of sinners. The predictions of destruction to their enemies of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, &c., not only have had their fulfilment in the diversified disasters of these nations, but perhaps also an antitypical fulfilment in the disasters of the wicked and other enemies of the gospel church. The predictions of distress or prosperity announced to the Jews by Amos, Micah, Isaiah, &c., before the Assyrian invasion, had different steps of fulfilment. (1) In the invasion under Hezekiah, and the merciful deliverance therefrom, and the reformation and prosperity which followed. (2) In the invasion of their kingdom under Manasseh, and the deliverance therefrom, and the reformation and prosperity under Josiah. (3) In their captivity in Babylon, and deliverance therefrom, and the prosperity which ensued. (4) In their harassments under the Syro-Grecians and the Romans, and the present long dispersion and the future deliverance therefrom. (5) In the erection of the gospel church. (6) In the entrance into, and happiness of, the faithful lives of the saints. And (7) In the happiness of the church in the eternal state. The like prophecies by Isaiah, Micah, Zephaniah, Obadiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, after the Assyrian invasion, had their fulfilment in the oppressive captivity of Babylon, and deliverance therefrom, and the prosperity which ensued; and in the other four subsequent steps already mentioned. Those by Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi related only to what followed the deliverance from Babylon. The predictions of Daniel (ch. ii. iii. vii. xi. xii.) had, or shall have, their fulfilment in the rise, management, and ruin of those respective empires. The majestic coming of Jesus Christ, predicted by himself, Mat. xxiv.; Lu. xx., and by the prophets, had, has, or will have, its accomplishment in his destruction of the Jewish nation—of the heathen empire of Rome—wickedness—and in the final judgment of the world;—in order to the erection or glorification of his church in these different periods. The predictions of the wickedness of those who reject Christ, 2 Th. 2. 2–11; 1 Ti. 4. 1–4; 2 Ti. 3. 1–6, &c., have their fulfilment in whatever similar happens in any period of the progress of wickedness. The predictions of the church's happiness in Re. vii. xi. xix. xx. xxi. xxii., shall have their fulfilment not only in the glorious coming age, but chiefly in the eternal state. So many events being thus narrated, and especially foretold in the same passage, it cannot reasonably be thought strange that the prophetic terms do not exactly agree to any one of the particular events or steps of fulfilment; they will nevertheless all agree to the whole fulfilment conjunctly taken. And the terms which appeared too high or too low for one step of fulfilment, will appear exactly answerable to another step. What did not answer to the predictions, literally understood, will be found to have corresponded to them in a figurative and spiritual sense.

XI. The language of Scripture, especially in the poetical and predictory parts, abounding with figures, it is necessary to have the knowledge of the principal of these fixed in our mind. The most remarkable figures of Scripture language are, (1) The name of ONE THING IS GIVEN TO ANOTHER, because of some connection with it, as its cause or effect, or as its subject or adjunct. Thus the temple is called Lebanon, because built of cedar-wood brought from Lebanon, Zec. 11. 1. A heavenly frame is called the Spirit, because produced by him, Re. 1. 10. The name of parents, Jacob Israel, Moab, &c., is given to their posterity, Is. 42. 22; 15. 1, 2, 5. A testimony is called the mouth, &c.

17. 6. Speech is called the tongue, Pr. 25. 15. The benefits which God bestows are called his love or grace, because they proceed from it, Jn. 1. 16; 1 Jn. 3. 1. The name of the effect is given to the cause: thus the name of the power of God, Ro. 1. 16. Esau's taking Canaanitish wives is called a grief, i.e. the cause of it, Ge. 26. 35. Faith is called victory over the world, i.e. the cause of it, 1 Jn. 5. 4. Samaria is called the transgression of Israel, and Jerusalem the high places of Judah, i.e. the cause thereof. Mi. 1. 5. Wisdom and knowledge are called stability, because they are means of it, Is. 33. 6. The name of an act is given to its object; so God is called the fear, hope, trust, &c., of his people, Ge. 31. 53; Joel 3. 16. The name of what contains anything is given to the thing contained: thus the inhabitants are called by the name of the city, the country, the world, &c., Je. 4. 4. 14, 29; Ge. 6. 11. The liquor is called a cup, 1 Co. 11. 25; and hence cup denotes a portion of mercy and judgment, Ps. 16. 5; 23. 4. Pullets are called a nest, De. 32. 11. The dispositions, thoughts, desires, &c., are called the heart, Ps. 62. 8; Je. 17. 9. What belongs to a person is called by his name: thus Christ's people are called Christ, 1 Co. 12. 12. The Lord's oblations are called the Lord, De. 10. 9, with Nu. 18. 8–31. The name of the sign is given to the thing signified; as when the supreme authority is called a sceptre, Ge. 49. 10; Zec. 10. 11.—or of the thing signified to the sign; as when the elements in the Lord's supper are called Christ's body and blood, 1 Co. 11. 24, 25;—or of a quality to that in which it is found; as when a crimson or scarlet-coloured thing is called crimson and scarlet; or a field containing springs is called the upper and nether springs, Is. 1. 18; Jos. 15. 19. The name is put for the person or thing named: thus the name of God, name of Christ, signify God himself, Christ himself, De. 28. 58; Ac. 4. 12. Sometimes also persons and things are named according as they appear, not as they really are: thus angels appearing as men are called men, Ge. xviii. xix. &c. The devil resembling Samuel is called Samuel, 1 Sa. 28. 14–20. Error is called a gospel, as it pretended to be one, Ga. 1. 6. (2) By taking persons or things together, MORE UNIVERSAL TERMS ARE USED FOR MORE RESTRICTED ONES;—as ALL for many, for all kinds, for some of every sort, for the greater or better part, Mat. 3. 5; 19. 28. The world, earth, or whole world, for the Roman empire, for the Gentiles, for the wicked, for the unbelievers, for many, La. 2. 1; Ro. 1. 8; 1 Jn. 2. 2; 5. 18; Re. 13. 3, 8; for Canaan, Ro. 4. 13. EVERY CREATURE for men, or many of them, Mar. 16. 15; Col. 1. 23. NORTH is put for Chaldea, a country north-east of Jerusalem, Je. 1. 13, 15; Zec. 6. 8. BEFORE for the east side, RIGHT HAND for south side, &c., Is. 9. 12. FOR EVER is put for a long time, Ge. 17. 8, 13; Da. 2. 4. Christ is said to die, be buried, rise again, &c., when it was only his body that died, &c., Jn. 19. 29, 42.—Or more restricted terms are used for more universal ones; as one for all of the kind, Ps. 1. 1. YESTERDAY for time past, He. 13. 8. THRICE, SEVEN TIMES, TEN TIMES, for often, very often, 2 Co. 12. 8; Ps. 119. 169; Nu. 14. 22. A-THOUSAND for very many, Is. 30. 17; De. 32. 30. A part for the whole, as souls for persons, Ac. 2. 43; Christ's resurrection for his whole appearance on earth, particularly after his death, Ac. 1. 22. AN HOUR, or DAY, for a period of time, Ps. 37. 13; Jn. 14. 23; 5. 25. (3) THE EXPRESSION APPEARS TO MEAN MUCH LESS OR MUCH MORE THAN IS REALLY MEANT; thus in the ten commandments, especially those negatively delivered, and in most of the negative injunctions, much less is expressed than is really meant, Ex. 20. 3–17. The Hebrew spies are represented as grasshoppers, i.e. very little, Nu. 13. 33. The tops of towers or walls are represented as reaching up to heaven, when very high, Ge. 11. 4; De. 11. 1. Men are represented as the sand on the shore, as a sea, as the dust, as the dew, as the grass, the vapours of a cloud, &c., when very many, Ge. 13. 16; 1 Sa. 13. 5; Ps. 110. 3; 72. 16. Plenty of a thing is represented as rivers of it, Job 29. 6; Ex. 3. 8. Saul and Jonathan as swifter than eagles, and stronger than lions, 2 Sa. 1. 23. (4) Some expressions, being uttered with a DERISIVE AIR, have a signification directly contrary to their natural meaning, as De. 32. 38; 2 Sa. 6. 20; 1 Ki. 18. 27; 22. 15; Ps. 22. 8; Ec. 11. 9; Zec. 11. 13; Mat. 26. 45. (5) But no figure more abundant in Scripture than METAPHOR, by which the names, qualities, or actions, proper to one person or thing, are attributed to another, because of some likeness between them. By this figure, and in order to accommodate to our weakness, almost the whole visible creation of God is formed into a representation of things spiritual and divine. By it Jehovah, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit; angels and men, in their different classes of good and bad; nations, churches, &c., are likened to human persons, in their parts, members, characters, stations; and even to animals, &c.—God's purposes, providence, covenants, word, law, gospel, ordinances, and blessings;—so also graces, sins, prosperity, adversity, life, death, resurrection, last judgment, and this world, heaven, hell, &c., are likened to things material, &c.; and that we may have emblematical instructors ever before us, metaphors are drawn from God himself, and from angels, but chiefly from human persons; from animals and vegetables; from the celestial luminaries or airy meteors; from substances fiery, liquid, or earthy; from means of human accommodation, houses, food, raiment, &c.; from times, typical institutions, &c. (See SCRIPTURE METAPHORS.) Two things are necessary to be always observed with respect to this figure:—

1. That the likening of anything to another naturally produces a likening of the acts, relations, and attributes of the thing compared, to the acts, attributes, and relations of the thing to which it is compared; nay, the relations and acts themselves, of the persons or things compared, receive a correspondent figurative representation. Thus, when God or Christ is figuratively represented as a MAN, his attributes are consequently represented as hands, feet, eyes, ears, mouth, nostrils, bowels; and he is represented as thinking, speaking, walking, writing, sitting, standing, riding, flying, sleeping, &c., Ps. 20. 6; 18. 8; 130. 2; Is. 1. 20; 60. 13; He. 4. 13, &c.;—and as a father, master, husband, king, warrior, husbandman, builder, &c., Mal. 1. 6; Is. 63. 16; 54. 5; 33. 22; 63. 1; Mat. 16. 18; Jn. 15. 1. These again introduce other correspondent figurative representations. Under the notion of a FATHER, he is represented as begetting, adopting, teaching, loving, pitying, and providing for and giving an inheritance to his people, 1 Pe. 1. 3; Ep. 1. 5; Ps. 32. 8; 103. 13, &c. Under the notion of a MASTER, he is represented as having a house, chambers, servants; and the favours he bestows in consequence of obedience are called a REWARD, Jn. 14. 2; Ca. 1. 4; Re. 22. 3, 12. Under the notion of a HUSBAND, he is represented as betrothing, affectionately loving, dwelling with, and providing for his people; who are represented as his bride, spouse, bringing forth children, and the like; and their apostasy from him by idolatry, or other indulged iniquity, is called whoredom, and themselves represented as harlots, Je. iii.; Ho. ii. iii.; Eze. 16. 23. Under the notion of a KING, he is represented as having subjects, armies, laws, sceptre, crown, throne, palace, Ps. xlv. cx. cxlviii., &c. Under the notion of a WARRIOR or CAPTAIN, he is represented as having armour, sword, bow, arrows, spear, helmet, &c., fighting with and routing his opposers, Hab. iii.;

Ps. vii. xviii. xxxv.; Is. lix. lxiii.; and angels, clouds, &c., are represented as his horses or chariots. Under the notion of a HUSBANDMAN, he is represented as hiring labourers, and ploughing, planting, sowing, reaping, winnowing churches or nations, as his fields, vineyard, garden, and corn; and the days of remarkable judgment are the harvest, vintage, Mat. xx. If he is represented as a FOWL, eagle, hen, &c.; his perfections and providences are represented as wings, feathers, Ps. 91. 4; Mat. 23. 37. Under the figure of a RAVENOUS BEAST, lion, bear, leopard, he is represented as roaring, tearing, swallowing up, waiting to destroy, &c., Am. 1. 2; Ho. 5. 14; 13. 7, 8. When the church in general is represented as a WOMAN, Christ is her head; young converts rooted in him, her hairs; ministers, her eyes, neck, feet; divine oracles and ordinances, her breasts and ornaments; church members, her children or daughters; blameless ones, virgins; scandalous and apostate ones, harlots. But when a particular saint is represented as a WOMAN, hope is the head; good works, the hair or feet; spiritual knowledge and faith, the eyes or ears; faith, the neck and hand; faith and love, the breasts; praise, prayer, and holy converse, the mouth or lips; love, the bowels; the affections and conversation, the feet; Christ's righteousness, implanted graces, bestowed gifts, and holy exercises, their robes and ornaments, Ps. xlv.; Ca. i.–viii. When the church is compared to a VISIBLE WORLD, Christ, or God in him, or his Word, is the light, the sun; ministers, the stars; ordinances, the moon and clouds; divine doctrines and influences, the refreshing wind, rain, dew, wells, rivers; persecution and distress, the storms, winter, night, scorching noon; saints, the corn, green grass, fruitful shrubs or trees; and their works or rewards are their fruit, Ca. i. ii. iv. vi.–viii., &c. When nations are represented as a VISIBLE WORLD, laws, rulers, and great men or idols are figured out as the sun, moon, stars, mountains, principal trees, or boughs, on which the subjects grow as berries, or sit as birds; and those of lower stations as the earth, air, sea, rivers, grass, stubble; and fearful judgments are the storms, earthquakes, eclipses, night, thunderings, lightnings, harvest, vintage, Re. vi. vii. viii. xiv. xvi.; Is. xxiv.; Eze. xxxiv. When nations are represented as a FAMILY, the country or chief city is the mother, the lesser ones the daughters; and if flourishing or never taken, they are called virgins, and magistrates are the parents, Is. xxiii. xlvii.; Je. xl.–li.; Eze. xvi. xxiii.; when nations or armies are represented as FLOCKS and HERDS, their governors are the shepherds; great or valiant men, the rams, bulls, he-goats, fat ones, &c., Eze. xxxiv.; Je. xxv.

2. That in fixing the sense exhibited by a metaphor, the comparison ought never to be run too far, or into anything which cannot be properly applied to the person or thing represented. And that which appears chiefly intended by the Spirit of God, and which is obviously figured out to us in the nature, form, or use of the thing from which the metaphor is taken, ought to be chiefly attended to. Thus, in metaphorical language, the term God represents angels, prophets, and magistrates, as God's deputies, and like him in dignity, glory, &c., Ex. 17. 1; Ps. 82. 1; 97. 7; but denotes devils, idols, or our belly, as worshipped and served instead of God, 2 Co. 4. 4; Phi. 3. 19. ANGEL represents Christ, ministers, or magistrates, as bearers of God's message or active performers of his work, Re. ii. iii. viii. ix. xvi. xvii. MAN, in what pertains to and is done by him, represents God in his excellencies and glorious works; eyes denote his knowledge and pity; ears, his knowledge or attention; mouth or lips, his word or authority; arms, hands, fingers, his power; heart, his purpose or love; bowels, his mercy; feet, his providential work; his face, his essential glory or providential manifestation of himself, &c., Ps. 34.15, 16; Is. 1.20; 25.11, &c. The frequent representation of God by this emblem at once exhibits JEHOVAH in his heavenly relations and appearances in the most endearing manner, and suggests the marvellous and everlasting inhabitation of his Son in our nature. But indwelling grace and sinfulness are represented as men, to denote their residence in our whole nature, and having in them what is similar to our several powers, Ep. 4.22, 24. WOMEN represent what is comely, kind, or what is weak and dispirited, Ca. 1.8; Na. 3.13. VIRGINS represent professors or churches as beautiful in their conversation, ordinances, or form; or cities and countries, glorious, prosperous, or never destroyed, Is. xxiii.; Je. xlv.; Mat. xxv.; Re. xiv. WIVES often figure out saints and churches as united to Christ, rendered fruitful by him, or adulterously departing from him, Ca. i.—viii.; Je. iii.; Eze. xvi. xxiii. TRAVELLING WOMEN represent God and Christ, as powerfully accomplishing remarkable events, Is. 42.14; 53.10; but represent wicked men as earnestly working mischief, or as rendered suddenly miserable, Ps. 7.14; Is. 13.8. USEFUL ANIMALS, as sheep, oxen, doves, represent Christ and his people as social, patient, pure, peaceable, and as acceptable sacrifices to God, Mat. 22.4; Jn. 21.17; but figure out wicked men as stupid, thoughtless, worthless, and as miserable sacrifices to the vengeance of God, Is. 53.6; 34.6. RAVENOUS ANIMALS, as eagles, lions, &c., represent God, Christ, and the saints as courageous, powerful, active, or terrible, Ho. 13.8; Re. 5.5; Pr. 28.1; Is. 40.31; but figure out wicked men as crafty, malicious, mischievous, destructive, Ps. 10.9; 22.20, 21; and their claws, teeth, horns, denote their power and means of doing mischief; and so horns become emblems of kings, kingdoms, oppressors, Da. vii. viii.; Zec. 1.18. Animal flesh denotes spiritual or temporal blessings; as nourishing and strengthening, Is. 25.6; Re. 19.21; indwelling grace denotes grace as sensible and easily impressed by God's influences, Eze. 36. 26; indwelling sinfulness refers to it as conveyed by natural generation, and as base, polluted, and putrifying, Ga. 5.17, 24. The CELESTIAL LUMINARIES as lofty, illuminating, or refreshing, represent God, Christ, or his word, ordinances, ministers, people, Is. 60.19; Re. 8.12; but as scorching or blasting, they represent afflictions, distress, persecutions, Re. 7.16; 16.8. VEGETABLES, plants, trees, corn, grass, flowers, represent Christ and his people as divinely formed and influenced, comely, lively, fruitful, and useful, Ca. ii. iv. vi. vii.; but figure out wicked men as in different stations, fruitful in wickedness, quickly blasted and destroyed by the wrath of God, Eze. xv. xxxi. STONES figure out Christ and his people as prepared of God, precious, durable, firm, and useful in building the church, 1 Pe. 2.4–6; Re. xxi.; but represent wicked men as insensible, obstinate, hurtful, Zec. 7.12. MOUNTAINS represent Christ, his church, or ordinances, as lofty, openly exhibited, firmly fixed, and in their protecting, supporting, and satisfying fullness, Is. 32.2; Joel 3.13; but also figure out difficulties, opposition, and enemies, states, or cities, Re. viii. xvii. WATER, rivers, seas, depths, floods, rain, dew; WIND, FIRE, as pure, purifying, pleasant, or useful, denote Christ, his Spirit, word, ordinances, Is. 32. 2; 44.3, 4; Eze. 37.9; Mat. 3.11; but as ruinous or terrible, they denote fearful judgments, opposition, affliction, Ps. 69.1, 2; Je. 4.11. Of COLOURS, white represents purity, glory, freedom, priesthood, peace, victory, Re. 3.4; black or pale, terribleness, calamity, death, grief, filthiness, Re. 6.5, 8; green, comeliness, growth, fruitfulness, freshness, Ca. 1.16; red, scarlet, &c., what is terrible, bloody, murderous, Re. 6.4; Is. 1.18.

XII. Where Scriptures at first sight seem to contradict one another, we must, by a serious consideration of them, labour to discover their harmony. But if we should not be able to reconcile them, we ought not to pronounce them irreconcilable, but rather attribute a deficiency to our own understandings. There can be no real contradiction, but when the differing passages mean precisely the same person or thing, and precisely in the same respect and circumstance: no such contradiction is to be found in Scripture. But where there seems to be one, either (1) The same terms are used in a different sense in the differing texts. Thus Paul directs to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, i.e. filial fear and holy awe, Phi. 2.12. John says there is no fear in love,—perfect love casteth out fear, i.e. slavish fear, 1 Jn. 4.18. The Samaritans feared the Lord, i.e. with a slavish dread,—and yet feared not the Lord, i.e. with a child-like, sincere, and holy awe of him, or a right worshipping of him, 2 Ki. 17.32–34. It is appointed for men once to die, i.e. a temporal death, He. 9.27; and yet if any one keep Christ's sayings, he shall never see death, i.e. eternal death, Jn. 8.51. A man is justified, i.e. before God in his person and state, by faith without the deeds of the law, Ro. 3.28; and yet by works a man is justified, i.e. before men, and not by faith only, Ja. 2.24. Hatred of others is very sinful, Tit. 3.3; and yet to hate our nearest relations, i.e. to love them less than we do Christ, is our duty, Lu. 14.26. Or (2) The seemingly opposite texts really treat of different subjects. Thus the Spirit of truth guided the apostles into all truth, i.e. in their doctrine, Jn. 16.13; and yet Peter erred, and was to be blamed, i.e. in his practice, Ga. 2.11–18. John Baptist was not Elias, i.e. not the prophet who lived under Ahab, Jn. 1.21; and yet was the Elias foretold by Malachi, i.e. one in the spirit and power of the ancient Elijah, Mal. 4.5; Mat. 11.11, 12, 14, 18; Mar. 9.11–15; Lu. 1.17. Or (3) In the seemingly opposite texts the same subject is considered in different parts or respects. Thus believers in Christ their head, as justified in his righteousness, and in respect of their new nature, and what they aim at and shall quickly obtain, are all fair without spot, Ca. 4.7; Je. 50.20; Nu. 23.21; 1 Jn. 3.9; 5.18; and yet in themselves, and with respect to remaining corruption in them, are all as an unclean thing—carnal, sold under sin, Is. 64.6; Ro. 7.14. In respect of his divine nature, Christ and his Father are one, Jn. 10.30; 1 Jn. 5.7. In respect of his divine person, he is his Father's equal and fellow, Zec. 13.7; Phi. 2.6. But in respect of his manhood and mediatory office, his Father is greater than he, Jn. 14.28; is his Master, Is. 49.3; his Head, 1 Co. 11.3; his God, Ep. 1.3; Jn. 20.17; his Creator, Je. 31.22; his Portion, Ps. 16.5, 6. In respect of his divine nature, Christ is the Lord from heaven, 1 Co. 15.47; God over all, Ro. 9.5. In his human nature he is the fruit of the earth, Is. 4.2; the child born, Is. 9.6. Or (4) The seemingly opposite texts respect different times and places. Thus during Christ's humiliation, the Spirit was not, i.e. was not remarkably poured out, Jn. 7.39; and yet after Christ's ascension he was poured out, Ac. ii.; 1 Th. 1.5. Circumcision and other Jewish ceremonies were long necessary duties, Ge. 17.9, 10; Ro. 3.1, 2. But after their abolition by the incarnation, obedience, death, and resurrection of Christ, they became sinful rites, Ga. 5.2; 4.9–11; Is. 66.3.

Most of the seeming contradictions in Scripture are found in the historical parts, where their connection with the great subject or scope of Scripture is less considerable, and where the blunder of a transcriber, or of a printer, in a few letters, might be easily admitted, without really detracting from the honour of the oracles of God.—The apparent contradictions in the history appear owing to the same persons having different names, or the deed being done by different persons: to the one of which it is ascribed in one text, and to another in the other text; or deeds similar, being really different. Reckoning of time is sometimes from one period and sometimes from another; especially when some kings had for some years a conjunct reign with their father, and then a separate reign by themselves. Round numbers of hundreds or thousands, are put for such as differed but little from them. What is not included in one reckoning is included in another, &c. Thus the sojourning of the Hebrews from the call of Abraham to leave his native country, Ge. 12. 1, to the deliverance from Egypt, was 430 years, Ex. 12.40, 41; Ga. 3.17; but from the birth of Isaac to that deliverance were but 400 years, Ge. 15.13. Jacob and his descendants, at their going down into Egypt, were in all seventy persons, Ge. 46.26, 27; De. 10.22; but excluding Joseph and his two sons, who were in Egypt before, and including eight of Jacob's daughters-in-law, they made seventy-five souls, Ac. 7.14. David, by Abishai and his army, slew 18,000 Edomites who came to assist the Syrians; or 18,000 Syrians, and also 12,000 Edomites: Joab assisted in killing 12,000 of these, or killed 12,000 besides, 2 Sa. 8.13; 1 Ch. 18.12; Ps. lx. title. The Ammonites hired 32,000 Syrians, besides the 1000 from Maachah; 33,000 in all, 2 Sa. 9.6; 1 Ch. 19.6, 7. Of the Syrian army were slain 7000, who fought in 700 chariots, and 40,000 horsemen, and as many footmen, or 40,000 horsemen who dismounted and fought on foot, 2 Sa. 10.18; 1 Ch. 19.17. Adino, or Jashobeam, might slay in one battle 800, and in another 300, 2 Sa. 23.8; 1 Ch. 11.11. When David numbered the people, the men of Judah amounted to 470,000, who, with the 30,000 under their thirty mighties, made 500,000. The men of Israel amounted to 800,000 exclusive of the 238,000 standing troops, which, put together, make almost 1,100,000, 2 Sa. 24.9; 1 Ch. 21.5; 27.1–15. No more than three years of famine were threatened for David's numbering the people, 1 Ch. 21.12; but, had these been added to the three preceding years of famine for Saul's murdering the Gibeonites, they, together with the year of release, would have made seven, 2 Sa. 24.13. David gave to Araunah, or Ornan, fifty shekels of silver for the thrashing-floor, and the oxen then sacrificed, 2 Sa. 24.24: and afterwards bought the whole farm for six hundred shekels of gold, for the temple to be built on, 1 Ch. 21.25. Solomon had 4000 stables, in which were 40,000 stalls, ten in each; or he had 4000 stalls at Jerusalem, and 40,000 in all, 1 Ki. 4.26; 2 Ch. 9.25. Hiram got 20 measures of oil for his family, 1 Ki. 5.11; and 20,000 baths of oil for his artificers besides, 2 Ch. 2.10. Solomon's workmen had 3300 subordinate overseers, and over these 300 more, in all 3600, 1 Ki. 5.16; 2 Ch. 2.18. The temple was founded in the 480th year of the deliverance from Egypt, 1 Ki. 6.1: therefore the 450 years mentioned Ac. 13.20, must either mark the time from the birth of Isaac to the settlement in Canaan, or the years of oppression mentioned in the book of Judges must be included in the years; or some of the latter judges must have been contemporary. Each of the brazen pillars, at the entrance of the tabernacle, was almost eighteen cubits, which, being joined together, made thirty-five cubits for both, 1 Ki. 7.15; 2 Ki. 25.17; 2 Ch. 2.15; Je. 52.21. The brazen sea had ordinarily no more than two thousand baths of water in it, 1 Ki. 7.26; but if filled to the brim, it could have held 3000, 2 Ch. 4.5. Solomon's fleet brought him from Ophir four hundred and fifty talents in all, of which 420 were clear gain, or they brought him 420 talents at one voyage, and 450 in another, 1 Ki. 9.28; 2 Ch. 8.18. At least in Solomon's time there was nothing in the ark but the two tables of the law, 1 Ki. 8.9; 2 Ch. 5.10; but the pot of manna and Aaron's budding rod were once in it, or rather placed in the fore-side of it, He. 9.4. King Ahaziah began his reign in the twenty-second year of his age, 2 Ki. 8.26; and in the forty-second year of the royalty of his mother's family, to which he was so like in his conduct, 2 Ch. 22.2. The vessels of gold and silver were not made till after the temple itself was repaired, 2 Ki. 12.10, 14; but were afterwards formed of what metal remained, 2 Ch. 24.11, 14. Jehoiachin's release was appointed on the 25th day of the month, Je. 52.31; but not executed till the 27th, 2 Ki. 25.27. Of the two lists of the returning captives, in Ezr. ii. and Ne. vii. the one may mark the numbers enrolled in order to return, and the other the numbers which actually returned.—To reconcile the apparent inconsistencies in the four Gospels, nothing more is necessary but to place the passages in their proper order, as is attempted in the subsequent CHRONOLOGY.

XIII. To obtain an exact knowledge of the Scripture, especially in its historical and prophetic parts, it is of great use to understand the GEOGRAPHY, which marks the situation of the places where the events mentioned took place, to understand the CHRONOLOGY, which marks the time when the events happened, and to understand the HISTORY of the nations, the fate of which the Scripture narrates or foretells. Without this knowledge our understanding of the histories or predictions of Scripture must be extremely scanty and confused, as we cannot perceive the events in their proper circumstances and connections. To assist the reader with what is most necessary on these heads is the aim of the last two chapters of this Introduction.

XIV. To be capable of perusing the oracles of God in their originals, with HUMILITY of mind, will open to our view, especially in the Old Testament, a scene of emphasis and glory, in thousands of instances, which cannot be exhibited in any translation whatsoever, and which no commentator observes.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE JEWISH LAWS AND TYPES.

For many ages mankind seem to have had no other form of government, either civil or sacred, but that of the patriarchal kind. Fathers were at once kings and priests to their numerous descendants. When God thought proper to form a nation for himself, and separated them from the rest of the world, they appear, for the first four hundred years, to have had no other government of their own. While they were in Egypt they had elders; but these appear to have been nothing more than the wisest and gravest among them, or the heads of their tribes, who had no power or civil jurisdiction, Ex. 3.16, with 18.13, 18. Their officers were nothing but overseers of their tasks, Ex. 5.14.

When they came out of Egypt, God, who formerly stood related to them as their Creator and covenant God, became a kind of national King to them. In correspondence to this threefold character, he gave them laws, moral, ceremonial, and civil. As their King, he gave them laws concerning servants, retaliations, damages, inheritances, marriages, borrowing of money, wars, punishments, admission into places of power and trust, or even into the camp or congregation, &c., Ex. xxi.—xxiii.; Le. xviii.—xx. xxv.; Nu. 5.1, 2; xxvii. xxxiv.—xxxvi.; De. xix.—xxv. As their King, he directed the form of their encampment and marching in the wilderness, Ex. xiii. xiv.; Nu. i.—

iv. ix. x.; directed their wars with the Amalekites, Midianites, and Canaanites, Ex. xviii.; 1 Sa. xv.; Nu. xxxi.; De. xx.; Jos. vi. viii.; and appointed their officers, Ex. iii. iv.; Nu. i. xi. Many things, which in another view were religious ceremonies, seem, in some respect, to have pertained to the form of the Jewish theocracy. The tabernacle, or temple, was the palace of their king; the oblations were his revenues or civil list; the priests and Levites, his courtiers and officers. Nor do I know but many of them were civil judges as well as ecclesiastical officers; even as our ruling elders in the church may lawfully be magistrates in the state.

To maintain the true religion constantly among them, and to prevent idolatry, which is at once so dishonourable to God and so destructive to the morals of mankind, and for securing their internal peace and happiness, he formed them into a nation uncommonly separated from the nations around. He even prohibited them to imitate their neighbours in the customs which they had observed in their false worship; as planting trees near altars; boiling kids in their mothers' milk; and perhaps sundry others; the unreasonableness of which we cannot now so clearly perceive. Idolatry and witchcraft, being at once the most presumptuous rebellion against the God of nature, and high treason against him as the King of Israel, were justly declared punishable by death in every Israelite or sojourning proselyte. To render their constitution firm, and to prevent their oppressing one another, he appointed the country which he gave them to be divided into 601,730 shares; to each warrior a share of about twelve acres of ground; and by the return of inheritances, once every fifty years, at the jubilee, he fixed these shares in their respective families. This secured a numerous body of freeholders, always ready to defend their country against every invader. And, while the Levites were dispersed through the nation for its religious instruction, their forty-eight cities and suburbs, which they held by divine right, at once accommodated them, and secured their persons and families as hostages for their good behaviour. Every tribe being independent in itself, their princes were captains in war, and magistrates in time of peace.

After their settlement in Canaan every city had its particular judges, who held their courts, at least some of them, in the gates, De. 16.19; Ju. 11.5, 6; Zec. 8.16. Every tribe had its supreme and subordinate rulers, according to the plan of Jethro the Midianite, Ex. xviii.; De. i. The chief rulers were called princes, or heads of thousands, Nu. 32.2; Jos. 9.15; 17.4; Nu. 10.4. Perhaps the seventy elders, mentioned Nu. xi., were the sixty rulers of ten thousands, together with the twelve princes of the tribes, Nu. i. vii. Of these, some think the Jewish sanhedrim or parliament was first constituted, and afterwards continued. But the utter silence of the Old Testament about any such court, when there was no king nor judge to govern the people, Ju. xvii. xxi., and when the people generally followed their kings, either in idolatry or reformation, makes the existence of any such court in those times extremely doubtful. Whether most of their fifteen judges, after effecting the several national deliverances for which God raised them up, retired to a private life, as before, is not altogether evident.

The Hebrews' request of a king is represented as a rejection of their theocratical form of government, 1 Sa. 8.7; 12.17, 19; under their kings, especially after the division of the kingdom, we find but small vestiges of it. Nay, except by David and Solomon, who were also prophets, we find scarcely anything good done by any of them, in which any sovereign on earth may not imitate them on proper occasions. Even when they were appointed by God to the government, they were called to their office by the people, as much as our British kings. They were installed in it by unction, at least where their title seemed dubious, 1 Sa. 10.1; 16.1; 1 Ki. 1.30; 2 Ki. 11.12; 23.3. They were crowned with a crown somewhat like the high-priest's mitre, 2 Sa. 1.10; 2 Ki. 11.12; Ps. 21.3. The principal subjects tendered them a kiss, importing allegiance, Ps. 2.12; and the people by loud acclamations testified their subjection, 1 Sa. 10.24; 1 Ki. 1.39. According to law none but a native Israelite could be king. Every king was to transcribe, for his own use, a copy of the Mosaic laws. He was to govern with equity and lenity. He was not to multiply to himself wives, horses, silver, or gold, but to depend on the assistance and protection of God in all his undertakings, De. 16.18–20; 17.14–20. Their great council, in which the supreme magistrate or his representative presided, had only power to enact regulations for executing the laws prescribed by God himself: nor, according to these rules, do they seem to have had any power of levying taxes. Till the reign of Saul, the Hebrews had never any standing troops; but the 601,730 freeholders were obliged, on a proper call, to bear arms against the enemy at their own expense, Ju. iii. vi. xx.; 1 Sa. xi. Saul had but a few thousand standing forces, 1 Sa. 13.2; 26.2; but David increased their number to 288,000, 1 Ch. 27.1–15. Jehoshaphat increased those of Judah to 1,160,000; 2 Ch. 17.14–19.

It only remains to take notice of some of the CLASSES or SECTS mentioned in the Scripture history of the Jewish nation. As (1) The SCRIBES. The most honourable of these were the secretaries of state and war, 2 Sa. 8.17; 2 Ki. 18.18; 22.3; 25.19. The inferior scribes were much like our writers to the signet, &c., 1 Ch. 2.55. Many of the Simeonites, it is said, being scattered amongst the other tribes, kept public schools, and were scribes of the lowest form, Ge. 49.7. There appears to have been another kind of ecclesiastical scribes, who were preaching clergy, and expounded the law of Moses in their own way, Lu. 5.17, 21; 11.44. (2) RABBINS. The title of RABBI, in the earlier ages, only denoted such as were of superior rank and station, Job 32.9; Es. 1.8; Je. 39.3; 41.1. But some ages before our Saviour's incarnation, the self-conceited doctors of learning began to assume it as a badge of literary honour, Mat. 23.7, 8. (3) The PHARISEES were a very numerous sect. They pretended that the traditions of the elders were of at least equal authority with the written Word of God. They affected to discover an uncommon sanctity in many painful austerities and trifling shows of devotion. They enlarged the fringes on the corners of their garments, and marked their foreheads with scrolls of parchment called phylacteries, on which were inscribed some noted sentences of the law, Mat. 6.23. (4) The SADUCEES. They seem to have acknowledged the divine authority of at least the books of Moses, but denied the existence of separate spirits, and the resurrection of the dead. They denied the word of God, and pretended that men were absolute masters of their own actions, without any supernatural influence. Many of the rich and powerful were of this sect, Ac. 23.8; 5.17; but we never hear of one of them converted to the Christian faith. (5) The SAMARITANS were the offspring of those heathens whom the kings of Assyria brought from the East, and planted in the country of the ten tribes. Their religion was a motley mixture of the heathen and the Jewish. They and the Jews generally hated one another to an uncommon degree; and in the days of our Saviour the Jews thought them all possessed by the devil, 2 Ki. 17. 24-34; Ezr. iv. v.; Ne. ii. iii. iv. vi.; Lu. 9. 52, 53; Jn. iv.; 8. 48. (6) The GALLILEANS were a party headed by one Judas, who refused to submit to the Romans, or to pay them any tribute, Lu. 13. 1; Ac. 5. 37. (7) The HERODIANS were the flatterers of Herod the tetrarch of Galilee, who were ready to comply with whatever heathenish customs he introduced, in order to please his Roman friends, Mat. 22. 16; Mar. 8. 15.

The knowledge of the TYPICAL REPRESENTATIONS under the Old Testament dispensation is of much more importance, the whole of it being intended by God as a proper mean of ushering his Son into our world, and into his subsequent glory: every religious rite, every noted person and event observable therein, may justly be considered as an emblem of what is spiritual, and as a TYPE, a FIGURE, a SUBSTANTIAL PREDICTION of good things to come. This idea is strongly supported by the apostle's calling the Jewish ordinances shadows of good things to come, the body of which is Christ, Col. 2. 17; and by most of his Epistle to the Hebrews. To view the noted PERSONS, EVENTS, and RITUAL INSTITUTIONS in relation to Jesus Christ and his New Testament and heavenly church, is indeed to apprehend them in a most amiable and engaging point of light. In this view we discern all the prophets bearing witness to our glorious and worthy Redeemer. Among these shadows of good things to come we may rank,

I. TYPICAL PERSONS, who, in their distinguished origin, their amiable qualities, their honourable stations, their peculiar work or call to it, their wise and faithful performance thereof, and remarkable success therein, represent Jesus, the Mediator of the New Testament and Saviour of men. In this light we may consider (1) ADAM, in his immediate formation by God, his perfect likeness to God, his distinguished form, in which the spiritual and material substances of creation were connected; in his lordship over this sublunary world, his divine marriage, and in his parental and federal relation to mankind, Ge. i. -v.; Ro. 5. 12-19; 1 Co. 15. 21, 22. (2) ABEL, in the debasement of his name, the righteousness of his life, the excellency and acceptableness of his sacrifice; in his brother's hatred and murder of him, and the fearful punishment which ensued, Ge. 4. 1-16; He. 11. 4; 12. 24; 1 Jn. 3. 12. (3) ENOCH, in his self-dedication to God, upright walking with him, clear prediction of the last judgment and embodied translation to heaven, Ge. 5. 22-24; He. 11. 5; Jude 14, 15. (4) NOAH, as the comforter of his friends, the upright favourite of his God, the erector of the ark, the saviour of his family and animals, the acceptable sacrificer to God, the covenant-head of those who reaped the new world, and the predictor of their different fates, Ge. v. -x.; He. 11. 6; 1 Pe. 3. 19, 20. (5) MELCHIZEDEK, in the secrecy of his genealogy; in his immediately divine instalment in the priesthood; in his relation to an accursed people as their priest and king; in his having no official successor; in his superiority to and blessing of Abraham; and in his generous refreshment of the victorious but weary troops, Ge. 14. 18-20; Ps. 110. 4; He. 7. 1-11. (6) ABRAHAM, in his divine call to leave his native country; in his firm trust in, ready obedience to, and high favour with God; in his meekness, his kindness, and his boldness in favour of Lot, his injurious friend; in his perfect equity and extensive usefulness to his neighbours; in his covenant headship over his long-promised and marvellously produced seed; and in the extraordinary oblations, whereby he confirmed it; and in the distinguished tempers and fate of those born in his house, Ge. xii. - xxv.; Ps. 105. 6-15; Ac. 7. 2-8; Ro. iv.; Ga. 3. 6-18; 4. 22-31; He. 11. 8-19. (7) ISAAC, in his long-predicted, much-desired, and marvellous birth; in his early enduring of persecution; in his voluntary oblation of himself to God, a source of great blessings to himself and his seed; in his happy marriage to his Gentile kinswoman; and in the long-desired birth, different tempers and states of his children, Ge. xxi. -xxvii.; Ga. 4. 26-29. (8) JACOB, in his noted uprightness; his acquirement of the birthright and blessing; his manifold troubles, and divine support and comfort under the same; his prevalent wrestling and powerful prayers; his numerous offspring, and the extensive blessings he left them, Ge. xxv. -xxxv.; xlv. -l.; Ho. 12. 3; 4. 12. (9) JOSEPH, as a darling son, marked with princely apparel; a hated, but prudent and affectionate brother; a trusty, wise, and successful servant; an inspired interpreter and prophet; a resolute resister of temptation; a patient sufferer of trials unnumbered, and through them highly exalted and singularly blessed; and, in fine, as the preserver of nations, the advancer of his master's kingdom, and nourisher of his father's family, Ge. 30. 22-24; xxxvii.; xxxix. -l.; Ps. 105. 16-22; Ac. 7. 9-18. (10) JOB, in his remarkable piety, integrity, humility, and usefulness; in his original happiness and wealth; in his sudden and sovereign reduction to depths of misery and woe; in his manifold and grievous sufferings from every quarter—hell, earth, and heaven; his remarkable patience under them; and his restoration at last to redoubled glory and wealth, Job i. -xlii.; Eze. 14. 14; Ja. 5. 11. (11) MOSES, in his honourable but hazardous birth; his marvellous preservation; his manifold trials, and patience under them; in his solemn call to his extensive office of deliverer, mediator, extraordinary priest, unparalleled prophet, honoured lawgiver, and king in Jeshurun; in his incomparable intimacy with God; and in his meekness, disinterestedness, fidelity, and zeal in the discharge of his work, Ex. ii. to De. xxxiv.; Ps. 105. 26, 27; 77. 20; Ac. 7. 20-40; He. 11. 23-29. (12) AARON, as a renowned saint, an eloquent orator, a holy prophet, a great high-priest, a covenant-head and common parent of priests unnumbered; in his solemn call to and investiture in his office of priesthood, and the confirmation thereof by miracles of mercy and wrath; in his laborious, faithful, and affectionate discharge thereof; and at last in his voluntary death on mount Hor, leaving his sacred vestments to his son, Ex. 4. 14-16; viii. -x. xxviii. xxxi.; Le. viii. -x.; Nu. xvi. xvii. xx. (13, 14) BEZALEEL and AHOIAB, as the divinely called, singularly qualified, faithful, laborious, and successful framers of a tabernacle for the symbolic residence of God, Ex. xxxi. xxxvi. -xl. (15) PHINEHAS, in his divinely directed though uncommon zeal for God and his nation; in his honourable reward of victory, peace, and everlasting priesthood; and in his covenant headship over his priestly posterity, Nu. xxv. xxxi.; Ps. 106. 30, 31. (16) JOSHUA, in his name pregnant with salvation; his education under Moses the lawgiver; his solemn call and repeated encouragement from God to his work, and his diligence therein; his miraculous assistance, diversified exploits, marvellous conquests, and wise distribution of the promised Canaan to God's chosen people; and in his zeal and care to establish among them the true worship and service of God, Ex. 17. 10, 13; Nu. 13. 16, 16; 14. 6-10, 30; 27. 15-23; De. 31. 1-8; Jos. i. -xxiv.; Ac. 7. 45; He. 4. 8. (17) GIDEON, in his original meanness; his lovely humility and meekness; his clearly divine, solemn, and miraculously attested call to deliver Israel; his amazing success by unlikely instruments; his care to reform his nation, maintain peace with his friends, and punish his con-temners, Ju. vi. -viii.; 1 Sa. 12. 11; He. 11. 32-34. (18) SAMSON, in his preternatural birth; his solemn separation to the service of God; his marvellous exploits; the men of Judah's betrayal of him into the hand of his enemies; and, in fine, his voluntary death for the ruin of his people's destroyers, Ju. xiii. -xvi.; He. 11. 32-34. (19) BOAZ the Bethlehemite, in his abundant wealth; his humble and affectionate mind; his divinely directed and honourable marriage to a destitute Gentile widow, and the happy issue thereof, Ru. i. -iv. (20) SAMUEL, in his marvellous birth; his early dedication to God; his solemn call to and faithful service of God as the prophet and deliverer of Israel; and in the remarkable justice which overtook the nation for rejecting him, 1 Sa. i. -xxxi.; He. 11. 32-34. (21) DAVID, in his fidelity, patience, meekness, zeal, eminent devotion, firm faith in, and high favour and familiarity with God, and in his triple union and call to this office, in which he was at once the psalmist, prophet, and monarch of Israel, and a head to the heathen around; in his covenant-headship over his royal posterity; in his unnumbered and grievous afflictions from every side, and his holy resignation thereto; in his marvellous exploits, and almost ever-successful wars with the enemies of his nation; in his astonishing care to order the church, and his expensive preparations for building the temple of God, 1 Sa. xvi. -xxx.; 2 Sa. i. -xxiv.; 1 Ki. i. ii.; 1 Ch. iii. xi. -xxix.; Ps. ii. -cl.; Ac. 13. 22. (22) SOLOMON, in his dearness to God; in his early and solemn enthronement; his charge from and benediction by his father; in his astonishing wisdom, wealth, and renown; in the extent, order, peace, and happiness of his kingdom; in his expensive, skilful, and laborious erection of a magnificent temple for God, and in his solemn dedication thereof by sacrifices and prayer, 2 Sa. 12. 25; 7. 12-16; 1 Ch. 17. 11-15; xxii. xxviii.; 2 Ch. i. -ix.; 1 Ki. i. -x.; Ps. lxxii. cxxxii. (23) ELIJAH, in his debased appearances, fervent zeal, effectual prayers, discriminating sacrifice, miracles of mercy and judgment, power over the nations, embodied translation to heaven, and the fearful reward which overtook his opposers of the family of Ahab according to his predictions, 2 Ch. 21. 12-15; 1 Ki. xvii. -xix. xxi.; 2 Ki. i. ii.; Lu. 4. 25, 26; Ja. 5. 17, 18. (24) ELISHA, in his solemn call to his prophetic function, and ready compliance therewith; his plentiful endowment with the Spirit of God, numerous miracles of mercy and judgment, usefulness to his nation, the manifold injuries he received, and the fearful resentments thereof by his God, 1 Ki. 19. 19-21; 2 Ki. ii. -ix.; 13. 14-21; Lu. 4. 27. (25) JONAH, in his exposure to the raging storm and billows, his burial alive in the whale's belly, and resurrection therefrom on the third day; and in the success which attended his subsequent ministration among the Gentiles, 2 Ki. 14. 25; Jonah i. -iv.; Mat. 12. 39-41. (26) ELIAKIM, in his succession to a traitor in office; his distinguished authority and faithful exercise thereof, for the honour of his master and advantage of his nation, Is. 22. 20-24. (27) DANIEL, in his renowned piety and uprightness; his high favour with God; his distinguished wisdom and uncommon revelations of God's purposes; his powerful prayers; his advancement to high honours through exile, debasement, and trouble; and in the terrible justice which overtook his malicious persecutors, Da. i. -xii.; Eze. 14. 14; 28. 3. (28) ZERUBABEL, in his dearness to God; his leading his people from Babylon to Canaan; and in his rebuilding the temple by weak means, and notwithstanding much opposition, Ezr. i. -vi.; Zec. 4. 6-10; Hag. 1. 14; 2. 23. (29) JOSHUA the high-priest, in the resistance he received from Satan; the divine changing of his apparel; in the contempt which he and his fellows endured and in their subsequent crowns of honour, and their fellowship with angels, Zec. iii. vi.; Ezr. 5. 2. (30) JOHN BAPTIST, in his divinely predicted, preternatural, and gladdening birth; his early and eminent sanctity of nature and life; and in his solemn call to his work of reformation; his zeal, fidelity, and success therein; and in his martyrdom in the cause of truth, Mat. iii. xiv.; Lu. i. iii.; Jn. i. iii. These did all prefigure Jesus Christ in everything—in his person, state, or conduct correspondent with these things.

II. TYPICAL CLASSES OR ORDERS OF MEN, which prefigured Jesus Christ and his gospel ministers or people in their stations, endowments, work, and reward. Thus (1) The ISRAELITES IN GENERAL, in the meanness of their extract; the supernatural manner of their production from Abraham; their long-continued paucity and weakness; their obstinacy and wickedness, and frequent murmurings and rebellions; their manifold distresses, wanderings, and enemies; and especially in God's federal betrothing of them to himself in their progenitors; marking them with his sign of circumcision; separating them to himself as his peculiar people, children, and servants; bestowing upon them his peculiar protection, provision, direction, laws, ordinances, promises, and country; and his increasing them into a multitude of nations; were figures of the saints, particularly in the gospel church, He. 11. 11, 12; Ex. i. ii. xiii. xiv. xvi. xvii. xix.; Nu. i. —xxxvi.; De. iv. —ix.; 26. 5-9; Ro. 9. 4, 5, &c. (2) The FIRST-BORN HEBREW MALES, as memorials of an accomplished redemption from Egypt; as the beginning of their father's strength, and preservers of their honourable name; as heirs to a double portion of their inheritance, and their principal blessing; as heads (if not priests before the law) to their brethren; as the honour of their families, and means of sanctifying them to God and procuring his blessing thereon; prefigured Jesus Christ, and were emblems of his chosen saints, Ex. 13. 2, 11-16; 22. 29; 34. 19; Nu. 3. 45-51; 8. 16; De. 21. 16, 17. (3) The KINSMEN-REDEEMERS, in their necessary nearness of kin, that the right of redemption might be theirs; in their recovering their friends' inheritance, if mortgaged; redeeming his person, if enslaved; avenging his blood, if he had been murdered; and in marrying his widow, and raising him up an honourable seed, if he died childless; prefigured Jesus Christ in our nature, securing our happiness, avenging our blood upon Satan and our lusts, redeeming our persons; and, by union and communion with them, rendering us fruitful in good works, Le. 25. 25; Nu. 35. 19-28; Ru. 4. 1-10. (4) The YOUNGER UNMARRIED BROTHERS of a Hebrew who died childless, in their obligation to espouse their brother's widow, and raise him up an heir to his estate, and their exposure to contempt if they refused, represent ministers and professors of the Christian church, who, by communion with the church, must either raise up a spiritual seed to Jesus their departed Brother, or expose themselves to everlasting shame and contempt, De. 25. 5-10. (5) The VOLUNTARY BOND-SERVANTS, who, from love to their master and family, refused to go free at the end of their term, and had their ear fastened to his door-post, in token of their engagement to perpetual service, figured out Jesus Christ, as from love to God and his people voluntarily engaging himself in the perpetual work of our salvation, and his people as constrained by his love to perpetual obedience, Ex. 21. 5, 6; De. 15. 16, 17. (6) The SOJOURNING STRANGERS, not Canaanites, in the tender care taken of them; in their free access to the oracles and ordinances of God, and to the cities of refuge; represented the free and abundant access of the Gentiles to the gospel church, and their high privileges therein, Ex.

22. 21; 12. 48, 49; Le. 19. 10; Nu. 15. 4; 19. 10; 35. 15, &c. (7) The HANGED MALEFACTORS of Israel in their accursed death and speedy burial, figured out our Redeemer as bearing with our guilt and curse; crucified for the pardon of our crimes; and decently interred without delay, to mark that the law was fulfilled for us, De. 21. 22, 23. (8) The HEBREW JUDGES, in their solemn call to deliver their people from that misery which their sins had procured; in their divine qualification for their work, and success therein; prefigured Jesus, our necessary, divinely called, well-qualified, and successful deliverer, Ju. ii. —xvi.; 1 Sa. i. —vii.; 12. 11; Ne. 9. 27. (9) The HEBREW KINGS of David's family as introduced by the Israelites' rejection of God's immediate government; as taken from among their brethren; as divinely called to, and secured in, power by a perpetual covenant; as installed by unction, coronation, kisses, and shouts of subjection; as copying out the law of God for themselves, and constantly attending to it as the rule of their administrations; as charged not to trust on carnal supports nor wallow in fleshly pleasures; as sitting on the Lord's throne and ruling the Lord's people, but never exalting their heart above them; and as fighting the Lord's battles, and extirpating his accursed enemies; represented Jesus Christ as the mediatorial King of his church; and his saints, as made kings unto God, 1 Sa. viii. xiii. xv.; 16. 1-13; 2 Ch. xi. xii.; 1 Ki. 1. 39; 2 Ki. 11. 12; 23. 30. (10) The HOLY PROPHETS, in their divine mission to, furniture for, and direction in their work; and in their diligence, fidelity, and zeal in it; explaining God's laws, attesting his truths, revealing his purposes, announcing his promises and threatenings, and directing his people; in being often signs and wonders to men; and in suffering much abuse and persecution from them, and in God's fearful resentment thereof; represented Jesus Christ and his gospel ministers and saints, Is. vi.; Je. i.; Eze. ii. —xi.; He. i.; Is. i. to Mal. iv.; 2 Ch. 36. 15-17; Mat. 23. 34, 35. (11) The NAZARITES, in their voluntary separation from others and solemn dedication to God; in the honourable length of their hair; in their abstinence from everything intoxicating and polluting; in their exact fulfilment and solemn finishing of their vow; figured out Jesus, his ministers, and his people, as solemnly, and yet voluntarily, set apart to their sacred work; as constant and increasing in their manifested subjection to God; making known their moderation to all men; and as, amidst debasement and troubles, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord; and at last finishing their course in a manner thankful, solemn, and highly honourable to God, Nu. vi.; Ju. xiii. (12) The NETHINIMS, i.e. given ones, which consisted of the Gibeonites, and such others as were devoted to the lower services of the tabernacle or temple, in drawing water to wash the sacrifices, or hewing wood to burn them; in their voluntary subjection, their mean employment, and yet distinguished nearness to God; represented our devoted, condescending, and debased Redeemer, approaching to, and enjoying remarkable fellowship with God in the service of his church, and his ministers and saints, Jos. 9. 22-27; 1 Ch. 9. 2; Ezr. 2. 58. (13) The LEVITES, in their honourable separation to the service of God, as a reward of their zeal against the worshippers of the golden calf; in their standing in the room of the first-born Israelites; in their being appointed to their work for preventing plagues on the Hebrew nation; in their early enrolment in the sacred lists, from a month old; in their solemn instalment in their office, by washing, waving, and diversified oblations; in their extensive labour, watching and bearing the tabernacle and its furniture, assisting the priests in the sacrifices, teaching the people, &c., during the vigour of life, and then retiring to an honourable rest; and in their large allotment of cities and incomes, though by far the smallest of the Hebrew tribes; prefigured Jesus, as the solemnly installed, the once debased, but faithful Servant of his Father, in all the concerns of his church; and were emblems of his ministers and saints, in their labours of love and their ample reward, Ex. 32. 27-29; De. 33. 8-11; Mal. 2. 5, 6; Nu. iii. iv. viii. xviii.; 35. 1-8; De. 12. 11-19; 14. 27-29; 18. 6-8; 2 Ch. 17. 8, 9. 19. 8; xxix. —xxx. i.; Ne. viii. (14) The AARONIC PRIESTS, in their attested descent from Aaron; their unblemished bodies; their separation from their brethren; their temperate diet, moderate mourning, and honourable marriage; their plain, but pure and sacred apparel; their divine call, and solemn attestation thereof by miracles of mercy and wrath; their solemn consecration to their office by washing, enrobing, oblations, unctions, and feasting; and in their extensive work of rearing and unrearing the tabernacle in the wilderness, taking care of the sacred furniture, offering all the gifts and sacrifices of their nation, burning the incense, placing and removing the show-bread, lighting and dressing the sacred lamps, blowing the silver trumpets, teaching and blessing the people, judging of their leprosy, purifying the unclean, encouraging the people in their battles; and, in fine, in their plentiful and sacred reward; prefigured Jesus in his honourable pedigree, perfect purity, absolute fitness for his work, solemn call to it, and instalment therein, and his faithful and complete discharge thereof, issuing in a glorious, abundant, and everlasting reward; and they were also emblems of his ministers and saints, He. 5. 1; Ezr. 2. 62, 63; Le. xxi.; 22. 1-13; 24. 5-9; 1. —x. xii. —xv.; Ex. xxix.; 28. 40-43; 2 Ch. 13. 10, 11; Nu. 4. 5-16; 6. 23-26; 8. 2, 3; 10. 1-10; xv. —xviii. xxviii. xxix.; De. 17. 8-13; 18. 1-5; 20. 1-4. (15) The HIGH-PRIEST, in his peculiar dignity; his government of the other priests; in his double suit of sacred vestments, the simple and golden; his plentiful unction; his never defiling himself, nor leaving the sanctuary; his espousing none but an honourable virgin; his performing the whole work of the annual expiation, purifying the sanctuary and its furniture, entering within the vail and returning to bless the people; prefigured Jesus, the sole High-priest of our profession, in his unparalleled excellency, dignity, and purity; his headship over his people; his robes of manhood, mediatorial office, and righteousness; his divine call to, and full preparation for his work, by the abundant influences of the Holy Ghost; his perfect attachment to, and attendance on that work; his communion with true and sanctified persons and pure churches; his making a full atonement for our sins, and bringing in an everlasting righteousness; and his entering into heaven by his sacrifice, that he might thence return to bless men in the gospel dispensation and last judgment, Ex. 28. 1-39; 29. 6; Le. 21. 10-12; viii. ix. xvi.

III. TYPICAL EVENTS, or transient things, which prefigured Jesus, and the great events of our redemption by him. (1) NOAH'S ARK, in its divine contrivance, appointment, and plan; in its firmness, strength, and fitness to swim through swelling floods, and to protect from deluging rains; in its capacious and regular stories, rooms, and entrance; in its illumination only from above; in its being the sole means of saving persons and animals from the overflowing deluge; in its saving the cargo which God directed by it, by the exposure of itself; and, in fine, firmly settling on its lofty rest; represented Jesus, in his diversified offices and states, as the sole means of saving a lost world committed to him by God from the overflowing deluge of transgression; and is a figure of his body the church, without the limits of which none can be saved, Ge. vi.—viii.; He. 11.7; 1 Pe. 3.20, 21. (2) JACOB'S LADDER, erected in the wilderness, and reaching from Jacob on earth to a promising JEHOVAH in heaven, and occupied by angels ascending and descending thereon; represented Jesus, as the Son of Jacob in his manhood, and of JEHOVAH in his divine person; in his different states of debasement and exaltation as the Mediator between God and men, ministered to by angels himself, and in whom they ministered to us, Ge. 27.11–15; Jn. 1.51. (3) MOSES' BUSH; low, earthly, and combustible; burning, but not consumed; represented Jesus' manhood; low and weak in itself, inhabited by his fullness of Godhead, and exposed to the fierceness of his Father's wrath, but not consumed; and his church, under fiery tribulations, but not destroyed, because inhabited by a promising God, Ex. 3.2–10; Ac. 7.30–34. (4) The PILLAR OF CLOUD AND FIRE, which conducted the Hebrews in the wilderness, in its form; its seasonable origin; its hovering over the erected tabernacle; in its bedewing, enlightening, protecting and directing influence; and in the many oracular instructions received from thence; marked out Jesus Christ, and his gospel ordinances, Ex. 13.20–22; 14.20; 40.34–38; Nu. 9.15–23; 10.33, 34; Ne. 9.14, 19; Ps. 105.39; 1 Co. 10.2. (5) The TREE discovered by God, and cast by Moses into the bitter waters of Marah for sweetening them, represented Jesus, found out by God, made under the law, and crucified for us, sweetening everything awful, bitter, and troublesome, Ex. 15.22–25. (6) The MANNA, divinely formed, marvellous in virtue; given freely, seasonably, plentifully, daily, early, and abundantly, to ill-deserving and even contemning murmurers, ready to perish; and gathered by all daily and early; shared equally; carefully prepared; speedily and regularly eaten: a golden potful of which was preserved for a lasting memorial in the holy of holies, represented Jesus as the bread of life, given to sinners of mankind in the gospel, and gathered and eaten by a true faith; and of which there is a plentiful memorial contained in gospel ordinances, Ex. xvi.; Nu. 11.4–9, 31–33; 21.5, 6; Ne. 9.15, 20; Jn. 6.32–57. (7) The ROCKS of Rephidim and Kadesh, as smitten by Moses' rod, and emitting streams of water sufficient for all the Hebrew millions, and following them in their way through the wilderness, represented Jesus, as obeying and suffering under Moses' law, that thence might issue forth streams of redeeming love, blood, spirit, and truth, for the life and comfort of sinners of mankind, Ex. 17.1–7; Nu. 20.1–11; Ne. 9.15, 20; Ps. 78.15, 16; 105.41; 114.8; 1 Co. 10.4. (8) The WELL DUG by the nobles of Israel on the border of Moab, at Moses' direction, represented Christ as the fountain opened in the gospel, by the prophets and apostles, for the purification and comfort of his people in this world, Nu. 21.16–18. (9) The CLUSTER OF GRAPES, brought by Caleb and Joshua from Eshcol, might figure out his unnumbered excellencies, blessings, promises, gifts, and graces, brought near in the gospel, and exhibited to men as evidences of the plenty which is to be enjoyed in the Canaan above, Nu. 13.23, 24. (10) While AARON'S BUDDING ROD, laid up in the foreside of the ark, marked the divine appointment, the constant succession, and ever useful labours of the Aaronic priests, it represented Jesus the ever flourishing and fruitful branch of the Lord; and the gospel rod of his strength, as the demonstrative evidence of his call to his high-priesthood, Nu. xvii.; Ps. 110.2. (11) The BRAZEN SERPENT, appointed by God, framed by Moses, and lifted up on a pole, that the serpent-bitten Israelites might be healed by looking to it, represented the Almighty Jesus, in the likeness of sinful flesh, fulfilling Moses' law, and lifted up on the cross and in the gospel, as the divinely-appointed, the easy, the accessible, the universal, and infallible Saviour and medicine of sinful men, who look to him by faith, Nu. 21.4–9; Jn. 3.14–17. (12, 13) The POOLS OF BETHESDA and SILOAM, occasionally noted for their healing virtue, might figure him out as the marvellous healer of maimed, withered, lame, diseased, and blind sinners, Jn. 5.1–4; 9.6, 7; Zec. 13.1; Is. 8.6. (14, 15) The DELIVERANCE of the Hebrews from Egypt and Babylon, in the time and manner fixed by God's promise, and notwithstanding much opposition, prefigured Jesus' promised, seasonable, marvellous, all-powerful deliverance of the nations from their misery under heathenism or Popery, through his erection or re-establishment of his gospel church; and are emblems of men's deliverance from an unregenerate state, Ex. xiv.; Ps. lxxviii. cv.; Ezr. i. ii. (16) The TRAVELS of the Hebrews in the wilderness, amidst sins, judgments, trials, mercies, and revelations unnumbered, and their marvellous ENTRANCE into Canaan, were typical of the diversified fates of the gospel church, and her marvellous entrance into her millennial and eternal rest, Ex. xv. to De. xxxiv.; Ne. 9.15–23; Ps. lxxviii. 14–54; 105.39–43; 106.14–33; Jos. i.–v. (17) Their divinely directed and wonderfully successful WARS, in the conquest or preservation of Canaan, were typical of the manifold struggles of the gospel church to extend her boundaries or maintain her privileges; and emblematical of the saints' spiritual warfare on earth, Ex. 17.8–16; Nu. 21.1–3, 21–35; Jos. vi.–xii.; Ju. i.–xvi.; 2 Sa. v. viii. x. &c.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS ORDINANCES, many, if not most of which, pertained to their civil as well as to their ceremonial system. These in general directed them to live as a people separated to the Lord, and who in all things, even the most minute, were zealous for his honour. (1) To mark them Abraham's seed, distinguished from all others; to seal with them the covenant of grace, and their peculiar relation to God; to prefigure Jesus Christ as shedding his blood for his people; and to represent our spiritual regeneration and mortification, every man-child was, under pain of death, to be CIRCUMCISED on the eighth day, Ge. xvii. (2) To mark that nothing should be rashly, or in an improper condition, given to the Lord, no animal, however clean, was to be offered till it was at least seven days old, Ex. 22.30. The fruit of trees was held polluted for the first three years, and only on the fourth year given to the Lord, after which it was the lawful property of its owner, Le. 19.23–25. The price of a dog, or the hire of a harlot, or anything else unlawfully gotten, was never to be offered to the Lord, De. 23.18; Is. 61.8. A bond-woman defiled, having nothing of her own, was to bring no trespass-offering, but to be scourged for her fault, Le. 19.20–22. (3) To mark a regard to the Lord's oblations, and to Jesus' death, thereby represented, none might eat of any blood, or of the fat of any cattle, sheep, or goats, Le. 17.6; 7.23–27. (4) To excite the Jews to the utmost purity in all manner of conversation, none might eat of clean beasts which had been torn, or had died of themselves, Le. 17.15; De. 14.21; and every one was to ease nature at a proper distance, and cover the excrements, De. 23.12–14. (5) To prevent symbolizing with heathenish and inhuman superstition, and to animate to the most tender compassion, none might cut his flesh or make himself bald in mourning for deceased friends, Le. 19.27, 28; De. 14.1. None might boil an animal in its mother's milk, or slay the dam along with her young, Ex. 23.19; 34.26; De. 14.21; 22.6, 7; Le. 22.28. Nor was the mouth of an ox, while treading out the corn, to be muzzled, De. 25.4. (6) To teach them the hurtfulness of improper mixtures of persons in societies, or of works and grace, or of ordinances of God and inventions of men; no eunuchs, bastards, Ammonites or Moabites, were to be admitted into any share of the Hebrew government, De. 23.1–8. No Israelite might wear a garment proper to the other sex, De. 22.5. None might wear a garment of woollen and linen, De. 22.11. None might sow his field with a mixture of divers seeds, De. 22.9. None might plough with an ox and an ass yoked together, De. 22.10; nor gender his cattle with divers kinds, Le. 19.19. (7) To mark the most disinterested love and tender compassion towards mankind; and to figure out the rich abundance of Jesus' redeeming grace, no servant who had fled from a hard master was to be delivered back to him, De. 23.15. No captive maid was to be married till she had remained a month to prepare herself and bewail the loss of her parents, De. 21.10–14. No man betrothed or newly married, or who had newly built a house or planted a vineyard, was required to attend in war, De. 20.5–7; 24.5. None might lend money upon usury to a poor Hebrew, if to any Hebrew at all, or render him a bond-servant, Le. 25.36, 37; De. 23.19. None might reap the corners of his field, nor glean those of his vineyard, nor shake his fruit-trees a second time, nor bring home a sheaf which he had once forgotten in the field; but all was to be left to the poor, to the stranger, to the fatherless, and the widow, Le. 19.9, 10. (8) Not only to deter from every indulgence of fleshly lust, but to mark the fearful end of those who hypocritically join themselves to the church, or who dishonour Jesus by their scandalous and continued outbreaks, the woman who falsely imposed herself upon a husband as a virgin was to be publicly stoned, De. 22.21; and a priest's daughter who played the harlot was to be burned, Le. 21.9. (9) To animate them to a constant gratitude for mercies received, and a regard to the commandments of God, every Hebrew's upper garment was marked with a blue fringe, commemorative of the redemption from Egypt, and of his obligation to obey the law of Moses, Nu. 15.37–41.

V. TYPICAL PLACES, which were ceremonially holy, but in different degrees. Canaan was holy in the lowest degree; the cities of refuge in the second; Jerusalem in the third; Mount Zion in the fourth; and the tabernacle and temple in the highest. In the more sacred places God symbolically dwelt: thither his offerings were brought; there his festivals were kept; and thence his oracles were to be sought, De. 12.5–7; Ps. lxxxvii. cxxii. cxxxii. (1) CANAAN, as the wonted residence of ejected sinners; as a land divinely chosen for God's favourites; long promised, freely bestowed, and graciously inspected by the eye of God; a land orderly allotted to God's chosen people, brought thither by miracles unnumbered; a land singularly nourished by the influences of heaven, and fruitful in everything necessary for subsistence and delight; and, to crown all, the sacred residence of JEHOVAH, and of the ordinances of his grace—but how despised and come short of through unbelief!—prefigured the state of the New Testament church and of the celestial happiness; and was an emblem of our new-covenant state of union to and fellowship with Jesus Christ, Ge. 15.18–21; Ex. 3.8, 17; 6.8; Nu. 14.7, 8; De. 6.10, 11; 8.7–10; 11.9–12; Ne. 9.25, 35; Eze. 20.6, 15; Ps. 106.24; He. 3.19. (2) The CITIES OF REFUGE, in their names; and as being near to the borders of the heathen, and easily accessible to every man-slayer; as Levitical cities of instruction; as perpetually having their gates open, with excellent roads leading to them; and in the protection and peace which they secured for the refugees who remained in them till the death of the high-priest; represented Jesus Christ as the all-renowned, near, accessible, completely furnished, and everlasting refuge of sinful men, Jews and Gentiles, in which they receive spiritual light, life, liberty, peace, and safety, Nu.35.6-34; De.4.41-43; Jos.xx.xxi. (3) JERUSALEM, in its name marking peace and perfection discerned and possessed; in its stable foundation, compact form, beautiful appearance, and strong fortifications; and as a city chosen of God, holy, healthy, rich, renowned, royal, populous, and privileged, prefigured the gospel church below and the heavenly Jerusalem above, Ps.48.1-4; 76.2; 122.2-9; 125.2; Jos.15.63. (4) MOUNT ZION, in its beautiful situation; its extensive and pleasant prospect; its unshaken stability; its joyous dwellings; its protection by and dearness to God as the peculiar residence of himself and his chosen kings of David's family, was also an emblem of our fixed and glorious spiritual state, and a figure of the gospel church and of the heavenly glory, 2 Sa.v.; Ps.48.2-4; 76.1; 78.68,69; 125.1. (5) The TABERNACLE, appointed for God's peculiar residence, was thus formed: a court sixty-one yards long, and about half as much in breadth, was inclosed by a linen hanging, perhaps of net-work, about nine feet in height, suspended by silver hooks on fifty-six brazen pillars, fixed at bottom in large sockets of the same metal. The sole entrance from the east was twelve yards wide, but hung over with a fine veil of embroidered linen suspended on four pillars; here, under the sky, stood the brazen altar and laver, at a small distance from the entrance of the sanctuary: hither every clean Hebrew or proselyte might come with his oblations. At the west end of this court stood the tabernacle, which was a close tent in form of a house, standing from east to west: its length was about $54\frac{1}{2}$ feet, its breadth $18\frac{1}{2}$, and its height as much: it was erected by forty-eight strong boards of shittim-wood overlaid with gold, fixed at bottom in ninety-six large sockets of silver, and bound together by five cross-bars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold; over these was spread a fourfold covering of embroidered linen, of haircloth, of strong leather, and of rams' skins dyed red, all properly connected by clasps or buttons. Its whole east end served for an entrance, and was hung with a veil of embroidered linen suspended by golden hooks on five pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. This tent was divided into two apartments: the first, called the sanctuary or holy place, was in length $36\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and in breadth or height half as much. Into this only the clean priests might enter; and in the west or inner end of it stood the golden candlestick, altar of incense, and table of show-bread. Beyond, and separated from this by another veil of embroidered linen, suspended on four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold, and fixed in sockets of silver, was the ORACLE or MOST HOLY PLACE, a square room of $18\frac{1}{2}$ feet, into which only the high-priest might enter on the day of expiation; and where the ark, with its furniture and the cloud of glory overshadowing it, had their residence. The tabernacle was solemnly consecrated at its erection, and every year was sanctified anew on the day of expiation. After it had been long carried from place to place, all that was important of it was lodged in Solomon's temple. It represented Jesus Christ, the free but altogether pure and precious gift of God, in his marvellous form but much unseen excellencies; in the order and connection of his offices, states, and everything else; as having in himself all fulness of atoning, purifying, enlightening, interceding, nourishing, law-magnifying virtue; as well-pleasing to God; and as being the sole Mediator, in whom God and his people have fellowship one with another. It also represented the church in her divine plan, her pure and precious materials, connected by the wisdom of God; in her different states, filled with all the fulness of Christ, consecrated by his blood and Spirit, and formed for his service; and at last, in all her true members and important concerns, fixed in the heavenly temple, Ex.xxv.-xxvii.; 30.26-29; xxxvi.-xl.; Nu.iii.iv.; Jos.18.1. (6) The TEMPLE stood on Mount Moriah, towards the south-east of Jerusalem, in a large court surrounded by a high wall, and divided into two parts, the INNER for the priests and Levites, and the OUTER for the clean Israelites. Its plan was divine, and the preparations for it were immense. It was a very magnificent structure. The wall of it consisted of alternate rows of cedar-wood and hewn stone, probably polished marble. The whole inside—floor, walls, and roof—was overlaid with gold, and curiously marked with figures of cherubim and palm-trees. On the outside of the wall were reared, in three stories, ninety chambers for accommodating the attending priests. Just before the entrance, or east end, stood the brazen altar, 36 feet square and 18 feet high, with a large brazen sea and ten lavers for washing the priests and sacrifices. The entrance was a porch of 36 feet from north to south, 18 from east to west, and 219 high, in the form of a steeple. On each side of the porch was a magnificent pillar, almost 33 feet high, and curiously adorned with chapters and figured pomegranates. Beyond this porch was the sanctuary, an apartment of 73 feet in length, $36\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth, and $54\frac{1}{2}$ in height. Here, at the west end, stood ten, if not eleven, golden candlesticks, each with seven branches; as many tables of show-bread, with twelve loaves on each; and a large altar of incense between the two rows of candlesticks and tables. To the westward of this apartment, and separated from it by a fine partition and veil, was the HOLY OF HOLIES, a square room of $36\frac{1}{2}$ feet in length and breadth, and $54\frac{1}{2}$ in height. Here, amidst thick darkness, stood the ark with its furniture, to which Solomon added two new cherubim of olive-tree, the wings of which stretched the whole breadth of the house over it. It also was solemnly dedicated by sacrifices and prayer, and was annually purified on the great day of expiation. It prefigured Jesus Christ and his church in their more glorious and exalted state. It typified his manhood as the divinely-planned, curious, pure, and glorious residence of his Godhead; typified his person as the glorious, fixed, and lasting means of our fellowship with God; typified the church, as formed by manifold oracles, ordinances, and members, to be the residence of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and typified heaven itself in its glorious fulness of redemption, and as the honoured mansion of complete and immediate fellowship with God; and it was an emblem of every particular saint, whose soul and body are by Jesus built up and consecrated as temples to God, 1 Ki.vi.-viii.; 1 Ch.xxii.-xxvi.; 29.1-9; 2 Ch.iii.-vi.

VI. The TYPICAL or SACRED UTENSILS were (1) The ARK. It was a chest made of shittim-wood, very fine and almost incorruptible, overlaid with gold; 4 feet 7 inches in length, 2 feet nine inches in breadth, and as much in height. At the top it had a golden cornice round about its lid, called the mercy-seat, because the symbol of the divine presence rested on it, which was of pure gold. Out of the ends of this lid were hammered two golden cherubim, which, with their expanded wings, covered the whole mercy-seat, while they seemed to pore upon it. Within this ark were repositied the two tables of the moral law; and in some other place of it the golden pot full of manna, Aaron's budding rod, and a copy of Moses' law. Being consecrated by an unction of blood and oil, it ordinarily stood on the floor at the very west end of the holy of holies. But in the wilderness, and even afterwards, it was, when necessary, carried about by means of staves fixed in its golden rings. None but priests might see it, under pain of death. By means of it the Israelites' passage through Jordan was opened, the lofty walls of Jericho were brought down, the Philistines and their idol were plagued, the curious Bethshemites were slain, and the family of Obed-edom were blessed. It represented Jesus Christ God-man, to the astonishment of angels and men, fulfilling all righteousness, glorifying and delighting his Father to the highest, and containing in him every memorial of JEHOVAH's kindness; everything necessary for the instruction, confirmation, and nourishment of his people; and who, being consecrated to his work, and carried about in the gospel, directs their journeys, blesses those who sincerely receive him, overcomes their enemies, opens their passage into their promised rest, and punishes such as profanely abuse him, Ex.25.10-22; 37.1-9; 40.9,35; 16.33,34; Nu.17.10; De.10.3-5; Le.16.2; Jos.3.11-17; 6.14-20; 1 Sa.v.; 6.19; 2 Sa.6.11; 1 Ki.8.4-12. (2) The TABLE OF SHOW-BREAD was formed of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. It was 3 feet 8 inches in length, half as much in breadth, and 2 feet 9 inches in height; and had at top a double cornice of gold to preserve the loaves from falling off. When necessary it was carried by staves of shittim-wood fixed in rings of gold. It had the same form of consecration as the ark. It stood in the north-west corner of the sanctuary. Upon it stood, in two rows, twelve loaves of show-bread, one for each Hebrew tribe, with some frankincense on them. The old ones were removed every Sabbath, and given to the priests for food, and new ones put in their place. Solomon made ten new golden tables, five of which were placed on each side of the golden altar, on each of which were placed twelve loaves. This table and its furniture prefigured Jesus Christ blessing all faithful men, in every generation, before God in his intercession; or the gospel, as presenting him and his fulness to his people, chiefly on the weekly Sabbath, Ex.25.23-30; 29.31; 30.27; 37.10-16; 40.22; Le.24.5-9; 8.31; 1 Ki.7.45; 2 Ch.4.8; Mat.12.4; He.9.2-21. (3) The ALTAR OF INCENSE, so called because frankincense was daily burned thereon while the burnt-offerings were consumed by sacred fire on the brazen altar, was formed of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. It was four-square, almost 22 inches in length and breadth, and twice as much in height. Whether its top was a golden grate I know not: it is certain it was surrounded with a golden cornice, which prevented the falling of any incense from it. It had spires or horns at the four corners of it, and was portable by staves of shittim-wood fixed in its golden rings. It was consecrated by an unction of blood and oil, and had its horns annually tipped with the blood of the general expiation. Solomon seems to have made a new one of cedar-wood, perhaps larger than that of Moses. It stood in the middle at the west end of the sanctuary, over against the mercy-seat. It represented Jesus Christ appearing before God in our nature in his intercession, and presenting our services to him, Ex.30.1-10; 27.34-38; 37.25-29; 1 Ki.6.20; Re.8.3,4. (4) The GOLDEN CANDLESTICK consisted of almost 114 pounds weight of gold beaten out into seven branches adorned with knops and flowers. It stood on the south side of the golden altar; and being daily supplied with sacred oil, and its lamps lighted and trimmed by the priests, was the sole illuminator of the sanctuary. Solomon made ten golden candlesticks, and placed five of them on each side of the sanctuary. It represented Jesus Christ, who hath the seven spirits of God, as the sole enlightener of his church, and his church as the enlightener of this dark world, Ex. 25. 31-40; 40.22-25; Le. 24.1-4; Nu. 8.1-4; 1 Sa. 3.3; 1 Ki. 7.49; 2 Ch. 4.7. (5) The BRAZEN LAVER was a large vessel holding water for the priests to wash their hands or feet, or the sacrifices, while they were occupied in their work at the tabernacle or temple. It stood near to the entrance of the sanctuary. Solomon formed ten new lavers, each capable of containing about 307 gallons 5 pints English wine-measure, five of which he placed on each side of the entrance to the sanctuary upon bases of curious workmanship. He also formed a still larger vessel, called the BRAZEN SEA, which upon occasion could hold 23,029 gallons 5 pints, which he placed upon 12 brazen oxen, three looking towards each quarter. This represented Jesus Christ as the fountain opened for the purification of all men, exhibited in the gospel by the twelve patient, pure, and laborious apostles, and other ministers, Ex. 30.17-21; 38.8; Le. 8.10,11; 1 Ki. 7.23-40; 2 Ch. 4.2-6, 14,15; He. 9.21. (6) The ALTAR, upon which the Lord's part of the sacrifices and meat-offerings was burned. Before the flood we read of no altars at all. Before the erection of the tabernacle the altars appear to have been formed of earth or unhewn stones; and such were afterwards used on some particular occasions. They represented Jesus in his debased state, but capable of enduring the suffering necessary to save. That which Moses formed consisted of shittim-wood overlaid with brass. It was about 9 feet square and 5½ feet high. Its top was a brazen grate, through which the ashes of the oblations fell into a pan below. At each corner it had a brazen spire or horn, which protected man-slayers. It was carried about when necessary on staves of shittim-wood overlaid with brass. The new altar which Solomon built for the temple was 36½ feet square, and its height 18½ feet. It had an easy access on the east side. After the captivity a large pile of stones appears to have supplied the place of it. This altar was consecrated by an unction of blood and oil. It represented Jesus Christ in his debased state as our infinitely-valuable Mediator, all-sufficient atonement, and never-failing refuge from God's wrath; through whom we have access to and nourishment from God, and our persons and services are rendered acceptable in his sight, Ex. 27.1-9; 29.36,37; 38.1-7; 1 Ki. 7.50; 2 Ch. 4.1; Ezr. 3.3, with Ge. 8.20; 12.7; 35.1,3; Ex. 20.24,25; Nu. 19.3; De. 21.4; Jos. 8.30-35; Ju. 6.24; 1 Sa. 7.6; 2 Sa. 24.25; 1 Ki. 8.63,64; 18.30,32. (7) For calling together the Hebrew assemblies, for announcing their journeys in the wilderness, for encouraging them in their battles, for proclaiming their festivals, or for triumphing on them by a solemn sound over the sacrifices, Moses made two SILVER TRUMPETS for the priests. Solomon increased the number to 120. These represented the gospel, by the preaching of which sinners are gathered to Jesus, animated to their spiritual pilgrimage, encouraged in their Christian warfare, and have their liberties and spiritual feasts announced; and of which the great subject is Christ and him crucified, Nu. 10.1-10; 2 Ch. 5.12; Ps. 81.1,2; 89.15. (8) The STANDARDS of weight and measure kept in the sanctuary might represent Christ's Word and his perfect pattern, Eze. 55.9-12; Ex. 30.13.

VII. TYPICAL OBLATIONS. Immediately after the fall God appears to have instituted sacrifices. With the skins of sacrificed animals our first parents were clothed by him, Ge. 3.21. Abel's offering of a sheep, Noah's oblations of animals and fowls, Abraham's oblation of a ram instead of Isaac, Ge. 4.4; 8.20; 22.13; Job's offerings for his children, and his friends' oblation for themselves, Job 1.5; 42.8; are the most noted sacrifices we read of during the first 2513 years of the world. Never, till in the federal transaction between God and Israel, Ex. xxiv., do we read of any sacrifices besides burnt-offerings. God having separated the Hebrews for a people to himself, exceedingly extended and expressly inculcated the law of typical oblations, including SACRIFICES, in which there was a destruction of the animal life, to the honour of God; and GIFTS, in which no life was destroyed, as in meat-offerings, drink-offerings, soul-ransom money, tithes, &c. While these oblations were intended as an acknowledgment that the Hebrews held all their property from God, they were typical of Jesus Christ, offered to God and useful to men, and generally represented the moral duties of ministers and people. The animals, as living, eatable, clean, tame, social, valuable, male, and in the prime of life, &c., and the fine flour, marked out the necessary excellency in Jesus Christ and his people, and their services. The voluntary manner in which they were offered represented the willing and cheerful obedience of Christ and his people. The presentation thereof at the door of the tabernacle imported dedication to God, and acceptableness through Christ's person and mediation. The laying on of the offerer's hands imported the transferring of guilt on the sacrifice, and the devoting it to God. The slaughter of the animals represented the death of Christ, that the offerer ought thus to have suffered, and our surrender of our life to his service. The sprinkling of the blood round about the altar or towards the mercy-seat, &c., marked the divine virtue of Christ's blood to satisfy a sinful world and purify the whole church. The washing of the sacrifice, or any part of it, marked the perfect purity of Christ, in which his people ought to imitate him. The burning of the whole or part of the oblation represented the sufferings of Christ and his people. The holy fire denoted the sacrifice of Christ for sinners, and holy love flaming in Christ and in his people. The parting of the oblations between God and the priests, or, in some cases, also the people, imported that the obedience and suffering of Christ, and even of his people, at once glorify God and bring advantage to men.

These oblations were (1) BURNT-OFFERINGS, so called because the flesh was wholly burned. These were the most dignified, as well as the most ancient and the most frequent, being offered on eight or nine stated times, and as many particular occasions; nay, repeatedly offered every day. Except when poverty obliged a man to offer birds, they were always to be of male cattle, sheep or kids. Being presented at the door of the tabernacle, and by the laying on of hands, charged with the offender's guilt, they were slain, and the flesh being rendered all pure, burned on the altar; the blood was sprinkled round about it; and the skin given to the priest. A meat-offering and drink-offering always attended them. They represented Jesus Christ, by the complete sacrifice of himself, honouring all his Father's perfections, that his people might obtain spiritual clothing, nourishment, and comfort, Le. 1.2,13; 6.8-13; 7.8; 22.19-27; Nu. 15.1-16; xxviii. xxix. (2) The SIN and TRESPASS OFFERINGS were never merely voluntary. Their matter was regulated according to the station, crime, or ability of the offerer. A bullock was offered for a priest, or for the congregation, or for their rulers; the fat was burned on the altar; the rest of the animal burned without the camp; and the blood partly sprinkled on the golden altar, or towards the mercy-seat; and the rest poured at the bottom of the brazen altar. In other cases the priest had the flesh for his share, and the blood, except of the expiation goat and leper's trespass-offering, was sprinkled on the horns, and round about the bottom of the brazen altar; but a very poor man offered an omer of fine flour, and a suspected adulteress an handful of barley-meal without any frankincense. They represented Jesus Christ, divinely charged with our sins, and dying to enable us to meet God's justice, and for advancing his own and his people's happiness, Le. iv. v.; 6.1-7, 24-30; 7.1-11; xvi.; Nu. 15.22-31. (3) PEACE-OFFERINGS, thanked God for mercies received, and obtained mercies desired, or paid vows. They might be either of a male or female of the herd or flock, as the offerer pleased. The fat was burned to the Lord; the right breast and shoulder, cheeks and maw, belonged to the priests; and the rest was returned to the offerer, to make a feast thereof with his friends; which, if a thank-offering, it behoved them to eat the same day; and in other cases on that and the next day. These offerings represented Jesus Christ as securing for us everlasting peace and prosperity, to the honour of his Father, the joy of ministers, and the speedy comfort of saved men, Le. iii.; 7.11-21, 28, 34; De. 18.3. (4) The MEAT-OFFERINGS, whether offered separately by themselves, or as appendages to burnt-offerings, peace-offerings, trespass-offerings, or to the kid and lamb sin-offerings, consisted of fine flour, frankincense, oil, and salt. Whether they were baked or fried, or not, a part thereof was burned on the altar to the Lord, and the rest belonged to the priests. They represented Jesus Christ, the most excellent fruit of the earth, prepared by dolorous sufferings to be the everlasting joy of JEHOVAH, and delightful nourishment of his chosen people, Le. 2.6, 14-23; 7.9,10; Nu. 15.1-16; 18.9,10. (5) The DRINK-OFFERINGS of wine were scarcely ever used alone, but attended the meat-offerings. Part of the wine was poured out to the Lord on the altar, and the rest was given to the priests. They represented that fulness of consolation which flows from Jesus' offering of himself for us, and our feeding on him by faith, Ex. 29.40; Nu. 15.1-16; xxviii. xxix. (6) The HOLY ANOINTING OIL was formed by pounding together myrrh, cinnamon, cassia, calamus, and olive-oil. By an unction of it the priests and holy utensils were consecrated to their sacred work; and on nothing else might it be put, or any ointment made like unto it, under pain of death. It represented the Holy Ghost in his manifold precious virtues, by whom Jesus Christ, his ministers, people, and ordinances, are consecrated to, and fitted for their respective uses, Ex. 30.22-33. (7) The SOUL-RANSOM MONEY, of which every man, poor or rich, was to give half a shekel when the congregation was numbered, if not once every year, that there might be no plague among them, represented Jesus Christ as a ransom, equally given for both poor and rich, to prevent the infliction of God's wrath on his people, Ex. 30.11-16; 38.25,26. (8) The FIRST-FRUIT of animals, vegetables, dough, wool, &c., which were partly assigned to the Lord, and partly to the priests, represented Jesus Christ as the great honourer of God, and the sanctifying head of his people; and represented his people as the glory and preservers of nations and churches, Ex. 13.12-16; 22.29,30; Le. 22.27; Nu. 18.12-18; 15.17-21. (9) To commemorate the Israelites' living in the wilderness on tenth deals of manna, their limited meat-offerings were all proportioned by tenth deals, Nu. 15.1-16. For the same reason the share which the Lord demanded of their crop was measured by TENTHS or TITHES. One-tenth of their whole income from their fields, &c., was assigned to the Levites in general, who gave a TENTH part thereof to the priests. A second TENTH of their incomes was appointed to be spent in feasting the poor, &c., at the sacred festivals. At least every third year ANOTHER TENTH, or perhaps the SECOND TENTH, was to be given to the Levites and the poor at their homes. These TITHES figured out Jesus Christ as the abundant provision of his people; and his people as the abundant means of his satisfaction and delight. They represented the duty of our devoting a considerable part of our incomes to the Lord, and of maintaining his faithful ministers in a decent manner, Nu. 18. 20-32; De. 14. 22-29. (10) Devoted things or persons assigned to the Lord by voluntary vow, more or less solemn. Nothing belonging to the Lord by an antecedent claim, as first-fruits, tithes, &c., might be devoted. Nothing devoted might be redeemed back, without paying a fifth-part more than the priest's estimation of its worth. And nothing devoted under a curse could be redeemed at all. These gifts represented Jesus Christ and his saints voluntarily, deliberately and constantly devoted to the service of God, Le. xxvii.

The WAVE and HEAVE OFFERINGS were not different from what we have mentioned, but were either less sacred oblations, or but a part of the more sacred. Thus the right shoulder and breast, fat, kidneys, &c., of the priest's ram of consecration, with the loaf, the cake of oiled bread, and wafer of unleavened bread, which attended it, Ex. 29. 22-26; Le. 8. 25-29; the right shoulder and breast, and perhaps the fat, of all peace-offerings, with the leavened loaf of the thank-offering, Le. 7. 30; 10. 15; the lepers' trespass-offering with its attendant log of oil, Le. 14. 12, 24; the jealousy-offering, Nu. 5. 25; the sheaf or omer of ripe ears at the feast of unleavened bread, Le. 23. 15; the two loaves at Pentecost, and their attendant peace-offering, Le. 23. 19, 20; the first of the dough, Nu. 15. 19, 21; the tithes, Nu. 18. 24-30; the Lord's tribute of the spoil of Midian, Nu. 31. 29, 41; were heaved up towards heaven, or waved towards the four winds, in acknowledgment of their coming from God, and in token of devoting them to his service, who is the Most High, and everywhere present JEHOVAH.

More abundantly to represent Jesus Christ in his person, his righteousness, and the virtue of them, two or more of the simple sacrifices were often joined together. Thus, for the consecration of the Levites, for the purification of a defiled Nazarite, for the purification of a woman polluted by child-birth, for the purification of one cured of a running issue, and for a congregational sin of ignorance or bird-expiation, a burnt-offering and a sin-offering were connected, Le. 5. 7; 12. 6, 8; 15. 14, 30; Nu. 8. 12; 6. 11; 15. 24. For the consecration of priests, a sin-offering, burnt-offering, and ram of consecration, i.e. a kind of peace-offering, Ex. xxix.; Le. viii. ix. For a Nazarite after finishing his vow, a sin-offering, burnt-offering, and peace-offering, Nu. 6. 14. For the purification of a healed leper, a bird-offering, a burnt-offering, a sin-offering, and a trespass-offering, Le. 14. 6-20. For dedicating the Mosaic altar, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, peace-offerings, twelve days repeated, Nu. vii. For dedicating Solomon's temple, large burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, 1 Ki. 8. 63, 64. For dedicating Zerubbabel's temple, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, and peace-offerings, Ezr. 8. 16. At Pentecost, a burnt-offering, sin-offering, and peace-offering, Le. 23. 15-21; Nu. 28. 26-31. At the other monthly and annual festivals, a burnt-offering and sin-offering, Le. xxiii.; Nu. xxviii. xix.

VIII. TYPICAL OR SACRED SEASONS. (1) To be a constant mean of Israel's fellowship with God, and to represent Jesus Christ as promised before the foundation of the world, and in these last times offered for all the world, to be the constant nourishment of their souls, and daily mean of their access to God and familiar intimacy with him—a lamb, bought with the public money, and charged with the guilt of all the tribes, by the laying on of the hands of the stationary men who represented them, was offered for the nation every morning about nine o'clock, while the incense was burned on the golden altar, and the people prayed in the court; and another in the afternoon; with their respective meat-offerings and drink-offerings, Ex. 29. 38-45; Le. 6. 9, 12; Nu. 28. 1-8, &c. (2) To prefigure the evangelical and celestial rest, and more abundant manifestation of Jesus Christ therein, not only was every SABBATH to be observed as a day of rest from all manner of work, and used in the exercises of devotion, but thereon the morning and evening sacrifices were doubled, Ex. 31. 12-17; 35. 2, 3; Nu. 15. 32-35; 28. 9, 10. (3) To thank God for the merciful alternations of the moon and changing of the seasons; to expiate the sins, and make grateful acknowledgment of the mercies of the finished month, and to supplicate the continuance of these favours, and to represent the renovation of all things to infinite advantage by Jesus' incarnation and mediation, and the happy and extensive discovery and virtue of himself and his work in the evangelical and eternal state; the DAY OF THE NEW MOON'S APPEARANCE was celebrated by abstinence from the servile labours of ploughing, sowing, &c., and a large burnt-offering of two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs; and a sin-offering of one kid was offered for the congregation; over which sacrifice the priests blew with the silver trumpets, Am. 8. 5; 2 Ki. 4. 22; Nu. 28. 11-15; 10. 10; Ps. 81. 1, 2. (4) To commemorate the Hebrews' deliverance from Egypt; to seal the covenant of grace with the genuine seed of Abraham; to prefigure our redemption through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, in the end of the world, by the rulers and people of Judah at this very season of the year; and to represent our safe and delightful feeding on him by faith and with godly sorrow; the PASSOVER was yearly observed on the 14th day of that month in which they came out of Egypt; which, for commemoration of that deliverance, was appointed to begin their sacred year, and answered nearly to our month of March. A male lamb or kid of a year old was taken, sacrificed, or at least slain; its blood sprinkled on the door-posts and upper lintel, as a means of preservation from the angel who destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians; and the flesh of it being roasted, without breaking a bone thereof, was eaten that same night by about twelve or twenty in a company, with unleavened bread, bitter herbs, and pious conference. Such as could not observe it that very day did it on that same day in the following month, Ex. xii.; Le. 23. 5; Jos. 5. 10; De. 16. 1-7; Nu. 9. 9-14; 28. 16; 2 Ch. 30. 1-20; 35. 1-18. (5) To commemorate the Israelites' affliction and coarse fare in Egypt, and their sudden deliverance therefrom; to commemorate their seven days' travels before they got through the Red Sea; to prefigure the low and afflicted, but devout life of our Redeemer and of his saints on earth; and to prefigure the fate of his gospel church; the FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD was observed on the seven days which followed the passover; on the first and last of which no servile work of ploughing, sowing, or the like, was transacted. No bread but unleavened was eaten upon any of the seven. On each of them two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs, were offered for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering for the congregation. The silver trumpets were blown over the burnt-offering, while it lay on the altar, Ex. 12. 17-20; 13. 4-10; 23. 14-17; 34. 18; Le. 23. 6-8; De. 16. 8; Nu. 28. 17-25. To sanctify the approaching harvest, and prefigure the resurrection of Jesus Christ, our great sacrifice from the dead, on that very day of the year, and the effectual spread of the gospel which followed it, a sheaf of barley was publicly reaped, thrashed, and winnowed: an omer of the meal or ears, being waved and heaved along with frankincense and oil, part of it was burnt on the altar along with a lamb for burnt-offering, and part of its double meat-offering, Le. 23. 9-14. (6) To give thanks for their quiet possession of Canaan, and for the mercies of the finished harvest; to commemorate the publication of the law from Mount Sinai; to prefigure the effusion of the Holy Ghost after our Saviour's ascension, and the amazing spread and influence of the gospel by means thereof, was the festival of PENTECOST observed; i.e. of the fiftieth day after the passover, about our Whitsuntide. No servile work was done thereon. Besides the ordinary festival sacrifice of two bullocks, two rams, and seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering, another sacrifice was offered of one bullock, two rams, and seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, a kid for a sin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering, along with two leavened loaves, each containing a tenth deal of fine flour; as the first-fruits of their finished wheat harvest. In presenting this oblation they made a solemn acknowledgment of the original meanness of their nation, and of God's gracious fulfilment of his promises to them, Ex. 23. 14-17; 34. 22, 23; Le. 23. 15-21; Nu. 28. 26-31; De. 16. 9-12; 26. 1-11. (7) To commemorate the creation of all things at this season; to thank God for the mercies of the finished civil year, and to obtain mercies for the year now commencing; to prepare the people for the great day of atonement; and especially to prefigure the joyful and efficacious spread of the gospel of our crucified Redeemer, was the FEAST OF TRUMPETS observed on the first day of the first civil, but seventh sacred month. No servile work was done thereon. To the new-moon offering above mentioned was added another sacrifice of one bullock, one ram, and seven lambs for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering. The silver trumpets, or others of rams' horns, were blown over the burning sacrifices from morning till night, Nu. 29. 1-6; 10. 10. (8) Perhaps to commemorate the fall of man on this day of the year, or to commemorate God's reconciliation to Israel after they had worshipped the golden calf, or contemned Canaan; but chiefly for expiating the sins of the preceding year, and to prefigure Jesus' debased and laborious course of obedience and suffering as the sole mean of atonement for a guilty world before God, the ANNUAL EXPIATION was observed on the 10th day of this month. No manner of work was to be done thereon more than on the Sabbath. All the Hebrews observed it in solemn fasting and affliction of their souls. After the daily sacrifice of a lamb for a burnt-offering, and the festival sacrifice of one bullock, one ram, seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering, were finished, the high-priest, washed in water, and mostly dressed in his plain garments, performed the whole work of sacrificing peculiar to that day. For himself and his fellow-priests he offered a bullock for a sin-offering. Having carried some incense into the holy of holies, and kindled it before, perhaps on the west side of the ark, he carried in part of the bullock's blood, and sprinkled it amidst the smoke of the incense, once towards the top, and seven times towards the foreside of the ark. Of the two goats for a sin-offering for the whole nation, one chosen by lot was offered: part of its blood was carried into the most holy place, and sprinkled once towards the top, and seven times towards the front of the mercy-seat, to make atonement for the oracle and sanctuary, which was ceremonially polluted by the sins of the worshippers who attended at it. The rest of the blood of the goat, mingled with part of the blood of the bullock, was sprinkled towards both sides of the sanctuary. The horns of the golden, and I suppose also of the brazen altar, were tipped therewith seven times. The other goat, after being charged with the guilt of the nation, confessed to God over his head, was dismissed by a fit person into the wilderness. Two rams, one for the priests and another for the people, were then offered for burnt-offerings; along with the fat of the bullock and goat of the sin-offerings; the flesh of which was burned without the camp. The high-priest then solemnly blessed the people, Nu.29.7-11; Le.23.26-32; xvi. (9) To commemorate the Israelites' safe dwelling in their tents for forty years in the Arabian wilderness; to show their thankfulness to God for their happy enjoyment of their fruitful country; to prefigure Jesus' tabernacling in our nature, and through his whole life solemnly offering up himself an infinitely valuable sacrifice to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of his people; to prefigure the state of the gospel church, the abundant manifestation and virtue of a crucified Redeemer therein, and the noted rest and joy of the apostolic and spiritual periods; and to represent the believers' pilgrimage on earth, and at last happy entrance into heaven; was the FEAST OF TABERNACLES celebrated by all the Israelites, at the place where God's tabernacle or temple stood, on the 15th and seven following days of the seventh sacred and first civil month. The first and last days thereof were solemn convocations, on which no servile work was done; the people dwelt in booths formed of olive-branches, &c.; and sin-offerings, and large, but constantly decreasing burnt-sacrifices, were offered on each of the days for the Israelitish nation, Le.23.33-43; De.16.13-15; 31.10; Ne.8.13-18; Nu.29.12-38. The law was read with peculiar solemnity at the feast of tabernacles, &c.; and it was only at THIS FEAST, the PASSOVER or feast of unleavened bread, and PENTECOST, that all the males of Israel, capable of travelling, were obliged to attend, Ex.23.14-17; 34.22,23; De.16.16. (10) For securing solemn instruction to the Hebrew nation; for relief of the poor, especially such as were in debt; and to mark Canaan the Lord's peculiar and rightful property; to manifest that not its fruitful soil, but God's providence was their security for a supply; and to prefigure our spiritual redemption, liberty, and rest, through Jesus Christ, particularly in the New Testament church and heavenly state; the SEVENTH YEAR, beginning with the seventh sacred month, when the fields were quite clear of their crop, was observed as a sabbath. The fields lay uncultivated; their spontaneous growth was common property, but chiefly belonged to the poor. And the debt which one Israelite owed to another was forborne if not remitted, Le.25.2-7; De.15.1-18; 31.10. (11) To keep the property of their respective shares of Canaan fixed in the Hebrew families, and to keep their genealogies clear till Christ should come; to prevent perpetual oppression, poverty, and bondage, or even undue hastening to be rich; but chiefly to prefigure our redemption by Jesus Christ in the evangelical and celestial state of the church; that year, which, beginning on the 10th day of the seventh sacred month, i.e. the fast of expiation, consisting partly of the 49th and partly of the 50th year, was observed as a JUBILEE of rest. It was proclaimed by sound of trumpet through the whole country; perhaps most of the inhabitants joined in the solemn sound. The fields lay uncultivated. The spontaneous growth belonged chiefly to the poor. Every debt which one Israelite or proselyte of the covenant owed to another was absolutely and finally remitted. Slaves and prisoners were set free. Estates which had been sold reverted to their original proprietors; and hence the nearer to the approaching jubilee a sale took place, the price of lands was so much the lower, Le.25.8-55.

IX. TYPICAL PURIFICATIONS. If a Hebrew under ceremonial uncleanness ate of the sacred oblations; if he ate any blood or any fat of sacrificeable animals; if he contemned the ordinance of circumcision, the passover, or water of separation; or if he were chargeable with murder, adultery, or any other presumptuous sin, no means of purification or of atonement were left him,—an awful hint to presumptuous contemners of Jesus Christ or his oracles and ordinances, that for them is reserved nothing but everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, Nu.15.30,31; 1Sa.3.14. But (1) If a wife were suspected of adultery, the case was cleared by a solemn adjuration of her before God by the priest; a coarse offering of barley-meal, to bring sin to remembrance; and a drinking of holy water impregnated with dust of the sanctuary, and with ink which had marked the curse due to adultery. If she were guilty, this draught made her thighs to rot and her belly to swell; if she were innocent, it rendered her healthy and fruitful,—an awful token of God's detestation of adultery and every approach thereto, or ill-grounded suspicion thereof; and that, by the effect of Jesus' death and word, and of afflictive providences on their hearts, the hypocrisy or sincerity of professors is much tried in this life; and that dreadful shall be the trial and punishment of hypocrites at last, Nu.v. (2) Not only was the general pollution of the Hebrew nation, and of the tabernacle, temple, and ordinances, which they had infected, annually purged by the GREAT EXPIATION already mentioned; but when murder was committed, and the murderer unknown, an unyoked heifer, brought by the nearest magistrates, was slain in a rough valley over running water. The magistrates, washing their hands over the slain heifer, solemnly protested their innocence of the crime and their ignorance of the criminal; and the priests present supplicated forgiveness.—A figure this of our redemption through the death of Jesus Christ, the seed of the woman, in the rough valley of this world, and the influence of his pure and purifying Spirit as connected therewith, De.xxi. (3) In DEFILEMENT contracted from HOLY THINGS, the high-priest, who offered the goat of the GREAT ANNUAL EXPIATION, and sprinkled its blood; he who led the scape-goat into the wilderness, or who burned the flesh of sin-offerings for priests or the congregation; was purified by a simple washing in water, Le.4.16,24-28. The brazen-pot, in which the flesh of other sin-offerings was boiled, was purified by washing and rinsing; but if it were an earthen vessel, it could not be cleansed at all, Le.6.23. The priest, who killed the red heifer; and he who casts the cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet wool into the fire with her flesh; he that burned her flesh; he that carried her ashes and laid them up in a clean place; he who sprinkled the water of separation, or even touched it; had to wash himself or clothes, if not both, and remain unclean until the even, Nu.19.7,8,10,21,22. (4) In DEFILEMENT contracted from UNCLEAN ANIMALS, which are emblems of wicked persons, he who touched their carcass was unclean until the even; and he who bore their carcass or ate thereof had to wash his clothes and remain unclean until the even, Le.xi.; De.xiv. (5) While circumcision ceremonially purged the original defilement of the child, Ge.17.9-14; Jos.5.2-8; the DEFILEMENT contracted by the mother IN CHILD-BIRTH, after remaining therein for a time, and twice as long in the case of a female child as in that of a male, was removed by a burnt-offering and a sin-offering, Le.xii. (6) In purging the DEFILEMENT contracted by LEPROSY, which required so much circumspection in the priests judging of it, and which represented sinful corruption reigning or raging in persons, families, or nations, the leper was seven times sprinkled with a mixture of water and of the blood of the slain bird: he shaved off all the hair on his flesh, and washed his body and clothes; and though admitted to the camp, was for seven days restrained from entering his own house: on the seventh day he again shaved off all the hair on his flesh, and washed his body and clothes; on the eighth day he offered a trespass-offering, a sin-offering, a burnt-offering, and a log of oil. The priest touched the extremities of the leper's body with part of the blood of the trespass-offering. After sprinkling part of the oil seven times towards the tabernacle, he in like manner touched the extremities of the body of the healed leper therewith, and poured another part of it on his head. Thus his purification not a little resembled the consecration of the high-priest. The leprous house was purified by a sevenfold sprinkling of bird's blood mingled with running water, Le.xiii. xiv. And if a man had but a scab suspected for a leprosy, he had to wash his clothes, Le.13.6. (7) In DEFILEMENT contracted from RUNNING ISSUES, which represented the scandalous eruptions of indwelling lusts, which are extremely infectious, the person when healed continued seven days in his purification; he washed his body and clothes in running water; and on the eighth offered two turtle-doves or two young pigeons, the one for a sin-offering and the other for a burnt-offering. He who touched the flesh or the bed of the person who had the issue, or had sat on his seat, or been spit upon by him, had to wash his body and clothes, and remain unclean until the even. He who but touched what had been under the unclean person had to remain unclean until the even, if not also to bathe himself and wash his clothes. The vessel of earth which had been touched by the unclean person was to be broken, and that of wood to be rinsed in water, Le.xv. (8) To purge out the DEFILEMENT contracted from DEAD BODIES, which represented a heart dead in sin and a fallen covenant-head, a red unyoked heifer was to be slain without the camp, even for the next in dignity to the high-priest. Her blood was seven times sprinkled towards the tabernacle. Her flesh, and the rest of her blood, and even her excrements, were burned, together with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet wool; and the ashes were laid up in a clean place without the camp. Of these ashes, mingled with running water, the water of purification was formed. He who touched a dead body or any part of it, or a grave, remained seven days in his uncleanness. He was to be sprinkled with the water of purification on the third and seventh day by a clean person with a bunch of hyssop: on the seventh day he had to wash himself and his clothes. The house or tent in which a person had died, and all the vessels in it, remained unclean seven days, and were purged by the sprinkled water of purification; and even he who touched anything which the unclean person had touched was rendered unclean until the even, Nu.xix. These PURIFICATIONS represented our spiritual cleansing from the sin of our holy exercises,—the sin of our fellowship with wicked men,—the sin of our original corruption or natural actions,—the sin of our indwelling lusts or infectious outbreaks, by the sacrifice, blood, and Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God and seed of the woman, continually applied to our conscience, heart, and practice while we live in this world.

CHAPTER IV.

A SHORT VIEW OF THE GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF NATIONS; NECESSARY FOR THE RIGHT UNDERSTANDING OF THE HISTORICAL, AND ESPECIALLY THE PROPHETICAL PARTS OF SCRIPTURES, THE CORRESPONDENT TEXTS OF WHICH ARE ALL ALONG GENERALLY QUOTED, AND OUGHT TO BE CAREFULLY COMPARED.

CHALDEA and CANAAN are the countries on earth the situations of which claim our particular regard, and to these the respective bearings of other countries have somewhat peculiarly important. CHALDEA was situated mostly to the westward of the river Euphrates, between the 31st and 35th degree of north latitude, and in the 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, and 49th of east longitude from London. It had Northern Arabia on the west, Persia on the east, Assyria on the north-east, and Mesopotamia on the north-west. Through these territories ran south-eastward into the Persian Gulf the famed rivers of Euphrates and Hiddekel, or Tigris. Here, about the 32d degree of north latitude, God created man and planted the garden of Eden upon the banks of the united stream of the rivers just mentioned; and which, a little below, was divided into the two rivers of Pison on the west, and Gihon on the east, Ge. 2. 8-14; 2 Ki. 19. 12, 13; Eze. 27. 21. The spot was not only extremely delightful in itself, but adapted for the spread of mankind from thence into the rest of the world. From the wood of which Noah built his ark, one is tempted to think that it was formed in this country. Not long after the flood we find the bulk of mankind in the plain of Shinar, and building the tower of Babylon, which could scarcely be 150 miles to the north-westward of Eden, Ge. 11. 1-9. Here Nimrod erected the first kingdom that we know of on earth. Not long after, Ashur, a descendant of Shem, erected another at Nineveh, about 150 miles to the north-east, on the river Hiddekel, Ge. 10. 9-12.

From Babel the posterity of Noah gradually dispersed themselves into the different quarters of the world. The descendants of JAPHETH, who became by far the most numerous, removed northward, and peopled the northern half of Asia. Thence the descendants of Javan and Gomer moved to the north-west, and peopled Europe. No doubt the descendants of Magog, or others, moved from Eastern Tartary into America, and peopled a great part of that country. The posterity of SHEM peopled the southern part of Asia, Assyria, Mesopotamia, Syria, Arabia, Chaldea, Persia, Judea, and perhaps China. But in later times, by the invasions of the Greeks, Romans, Tartars, and Turks, and by the European settlements in the East Indies, most of what once pertained to the descendants of Shem is now subjected to those of Japheth. Of the posterity of HAM, the Canaanites took up their dwelling in that pleasant country which has been since called by their name, and which God had marked out for the residence of his peculiar people. It lies in the 32d, 33d, and 34th degrees of north latitude, and the 36th and 37th of east longitude from London, about four hundred miles westward of Babylon. It has Arabia on the east and south, Egypt on the south-west, the Mediterranean Sea on the west, Mount Lebanon and Syria on the north, and shall hereafter be more particularly described. The rest of Ham's off-spring, after part of them had continued for some generations in Asia, removed south-westward to Africa, and peopled it. No doubt some of them from thence, by means of tempests or otherwise, crossed the ocean into South America and the islands adjacent. Distinguished estrangement from the knowledge of the true God, miserable bondage to Satan and to their fellows of mankind, have in every age been the general characteristics of the descendants of Ham, particularly of those by Canaan. Never that we know of did they form themselves into any extensive and lasting empire. Never, except for a short time and in a very restricted extent, have they been able to rule over the descendants of Shem or Japheth, Ge. x.; 9. 25-27. But a more particular account of these descendants of Noah mentioned in Scripture is necessary.

I. Not long after God had frustrated the attempt of mankind at Babel, and confounded their language, the CANAANITES, descended from Ham's youngest son, in seven principal nations of Amorites, Hittites, Jebusites, Girgashites, Perizzites, Hivites, &c., took possession of CANAAN, and formed themselves into almost as many kingdoms as they had cities, Ge. 10. 15-19; 12. 6; 13. 7; 14. 2, 5-7; 15. 19-21; Ex. 3. 8; 23. 23; Jos. xii.; Ju. 1. 7. Notwithstanding all that Melchizedek, one of their kings, could do to reform them, they quickly became monsters in wickedness; and God punished them with terrible ravage and reduction by Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, Ge. 13. 13; xiv. About sixteen years after, A. M. 2107, their kingdoms of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboiim were, for their unnatural lewdness, consumed with fire and brimstone from heaven, and the country turned into a dead and poisonous lake, into which the river Jordan hath since run without any visible outlet, Ge. xviii. xix.; Job 18. 11-21; Is. 1. 9, 10; 13. 19; Eze. 16. 49, 50; Am. 4. 11; Zep. 2. 9; 2 Pe. 2. 6; Jude 7. The rest of the Canaanites were relieved about 440 years longer, till God had prepared the Hebrew nation to take possession of their country, Ge. 15. 16. And for some time before the Hebrews invaded Canaan, God had weakened the natives by pestilence, swarms of insects, civil wars, and the like, Ex. 23. 28; Nu. 13. 32; De. 7. 20; Jos. 24. 12; Ju. 1. 7. Within about seven years Moses conquered two powerful kingdoms on the east, and Joshua thirty-one lesser kingdoms on the west of Jordan, and gave their land to the Israelites, Ge. 15. 18-21; Ex. 3. 8; 23. 23; 34. 11; Nu. 21. 21-35; xxxii. xxxiv.; De. 2. 26-37; 3. 1-20; Jos. vi.-xxi. Such Canaanites as were left in the land (many of them being made tributaries), having seduced the Israelites into a compliance with their idolatries, retained or recovered a considerable part of the strongest places of the country. They even formed themselves into a mighty kingdom in Western Galilee, which, governed by Jabin, did for twenty years terribly oppress the Israelites. But their army was defeated, and it is probable their empire unhinged, by Barak, De. vii.; Nu. 33. 55, 56; Jos. 23. 11-16; Ju. i.-iv.; Ezr. 9. 11, 12; Ps. 106. 34-40. Such as still remained we may suppose assisted the Midianites, and especially the Philistines, to oppress the Israelites, Ju. vi. x. xiii.; 1 Sa. iv. xiii. xxxi. But King David and Solomon reduced them all as slaves to their people. The latter employed 153,000 of them in the most servile parts of his work—in building his temple, palace, &c., Ge. 9. 25, 26; 2 Sa. 5. 6-9; 1 Ki. 5. 15, 16; 9. 20, 21; 1 Ch. 11. 4-8; 2 Ch. 2. 17, 18; 8. 7, 8. While part of the Canaanites continued among the Israelites till after their captivity, tempting them to idolatry, others joined their Gibeonite brethren, dedicating themselves to the servile work of God's temple under the name of Nethinims, 1 Ch. 9. 2; Ezr. ix. x.; 2. 55, 58; Ne. 2. 3; xiii.

Such Canaanites as had formed themselves into the kingdoms of Zidon and Tyre, on the north-west of Canaan, not only escaped the sword of the Jewish conquerors, but for many ages carried on a most flourishing trade, especially by sea. Scarcely was there a coast or isle adapted to trade in the Mediterranean to which they did not send forth their colonies. No doubt multitudes who fled from the sword of Joshua, Barak, or David, took refuge among them, while others retired to Greece, north of Africa, &c., and there formed themselves into powerful states. The Tyrians entered into a brotherly covenant of friendship with the Israelites under David and Solomon, 2 Sa. v.; 1 Ki. v. ix.; Am. 1. 9. But this they grossly violated in joining the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat, Ps. 83. 7; and in delivering up Jewish refugees to the Edomites in the days of Jehoram and Ahaz, or in selling them to the Grecians for slaves, Joel 3. 4-6; Am. 1. 9. To punish this and their other abounding impieties, Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, about A. M. 3282, ravaged their country, took multitudes prisoners, and sold them to the Arabs for slaves, Is. xxiii.; Joel 3. 4-8; Am. 1. 9, 10. But the Tyrians having defeated his fleet, obliged his troops, who had besieged their capital for five years, to retire. They then pushed their traffic with more assiduity and vigour than ever. There was scarcely a nation in the west of Asia, north of Africa, or south of Europe with which they had not some trading. The whole strength of Phœnicia was employed in their fleets and armies, Is. 23. 17; Eze. xxvii. Provoked with their attempts to assist Zedekiah, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, after he had sacked Jerusalem, A. M. 3416, marched his troops into Phœnicia, and marking his motions with terrible ravage and bloodshed, multitudes were slain, or taken prisoners and sold for slaves. The merchants fled away to Cilicia, Spain, Carthage, &c. By fire and sword he rendered their once glorious country almost utterly desolate. Ethbaal, their haughty monarch, was ignominiously slain. And after a siege of thirteen years, Tyre was taken, A. M. 3432; but the inhabitants had removed themselves and their valuable effects to a neighbouring island about seventy paces from the shore. Disappointed of the rich booty which they expected as the reward of their inexpressible fatigues, the Chaldeans raged like infernal spirits, abusing and murdering the few weak or sickly Tyrians whom they could find, burning the city, and hurling the ashes thereof into the sea. That Nebuchadnezzar in his fury pursued the fugitive Tyrians into the north of Africa, the Mediterranean isles, or south-west of Spain, as some writers pretend, is scarcely probable. It is more likely that those in the island pacified his rage by a partial submission. But to the inexpressible grief and vexation of not only the Phœnicians themselves, but of the merchants who traded with them, much of the Tyrian wealth was lost in the sea or otherwise destroyed; and never while the Chaldean monarchy continued did they recover their power or traffic, Is. xxiii.; Je. 25. 9, 22; 27. 3-8; 47. 4; Eze. xxvi.-xxviii.; Joel 3. 4-8; Am. 1. 9, 10.

But, just seventy years after the Chaldeans had destroyed their city on the continent, instead of which they had built one upon the island, we find the Tyrians assisting Darius Hystaspes, king of Persia, against the Ionian rebels of Lesser Asia, A. M. 3502. They also aided Xerxes, his son, in his mad invasion of Greece. Having fortified their new city, and recovered their enriching trade, they and their fellow Phœnicians, in conjunction with the Egyptians, attempted to free themselves from the Persian yoke. About A. M. 3653 Artaxerxes Ochus ravaged their country in his inhuman manner. The Zidonians, finding themselves betrayed in the siege by Tennes their king, and Mentor his Grecian general, set fire to their city and perished in the flames, to the number of 40,000. The rest of the Phœnicians submitted, and had their slavery increased. Much about the same time the slaves murdered almost all their masters at Tyre. Highly provoked with their refusing to admit him into their city, that he might sacrifice to their principal idol, Alexander the Great, about A.M. 3672, laid siege to Tyre; and, with infinite labour and expense, took it by storm, after a siege of seven months. About 15,000 of the inhabitants had fled off in the Zidonian ships; and many of their wives and children had been transported to Carthage when the siege began. Of the men who remained, Alexander put 8000 to the sword, crucified 2000 of the principal, and sold 30,000 to the Jews, Arabs, and others, for slaves, Ge. 9. 25, 27; Ps. 83. 7-18; Is. xxiii.; Je. 47. 4; Eze. xxvi.-xxviii.; Joel 3. 4-8; Am. 1. 9, 10; Zec. 9. 1-4.

When Alexander's fury was abated, he repealed Tyre from the continent of Phenicia. But Antigonus, one of his captains who succeeded him, soon after reduced it to the brink of ruin, having taken it by a siege of nineteen months. The Alexandrians in Egypt having drawn to themselves the trade of the nations around, the Phenicians could never recover their influence: they were also often embroiled in the contests between the Syro-Grecian and Egypto-Grecian successors of Alexander the Great. To punish their frequent riots, and their siding with Cassius his enemy, Augustus, the Roman emperor, a little before our Saviour's birth, deprived the Tyrians and Zidonians of their municipal freedom. About A.D. 194 Niger, the Roman usurper, burned Tyre into a heap of ruins, and murdered most of its inhabitants. From A.D. 633 to about 1130 Phenicia was enslaved by the Saracens and Seljukian Turks. It had been subjected about 160 years to the inhuman popish Crusades, when Alphix, the sultan of Egypt, took it, and utterly destroyed Tyre and Zidon and the other places of strength, that they might never more afford shelter to the Europeans; since which Tyre has been generally a heap of ruins, inhabited only by a few pitiful fishermen, Is. xxiii.; Joel 3. 4-8; Am. 1. 9, 10; Je. 47. 4, 7; Zec. 9. 1-4; Eze. xxvi.-xxviii. The Canaanites, who, in their flight from Joshua, David, Nebuchadnezzar, &c., had retired to the north of Africa, formed there several sovereignties; but that of Carthage was the most noted. After terrible contentions among themselves, or with the Greeks in Sicily, and Romans in Sicily, Spain, Italy, and Africa, they were all, about 3858, reduced by the Romans to the basest servitude. For about 1900 years past their country, by the tyranny of the Romans, Vandals, Saracens, and Turks, has been an almost constant scene of misery and bondage. Such Phenicians as retired to Europe, and there for a time subsisted under the names of Bœotians, Pelasgi, Etruscans, &c., were quickly reduced to misery and bondage by the Greek and Roman descendants of Japheth. Thus Noah's curse of servitude followed these Canaanites whithersoever they fled to escape it, Ge. 9. 25-27.

II. The PHILISTINES were a part of the posterity of Mizraim, the second son of Ham, Ge. 10. 14; 1 Ch. 1. 11, 12. Leaving Caphtor, or the north-east parts of Egypt, they very early settled in a small strip of territory along the sea-shore, in the south-west of Canaan, having driven out the Avites, who before possessed it, De. 2. 23; Je. 47. 4; Am. 9. 7. In the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Ephraim, they had begun to discover their malicious spite against the Hebrews, Ge. xx. xxi. xxvi.; 1 Ch. 7. 21. Notwithstanding Joshua's allotment of their territory to the tribe of Judah, they long retained their fortified cities of Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. Nor did they ever lose an opportunity of doing the Israelites mischief. Neither covenants of friendship with the patriarchs, nor the rebuffs they met with from Shamgar, Samson, the ark, Samuel, Jonathan, Saul, or David, could long restrain their implacable resentment, Ju. 3. 31; xiii. -xvi.; 1 Sa. iv. -vii. xiii. xiv. xvii. xviii. xxxi.; 2 Sa. v.; 1 Ch. 14. 8-17. At last David reduced their country, 2 Sa. 8. 1; 1 Ch. 18. 1. But towards the end of his reign they attempted to revolt, 2 Sa. 21. 13-22; 1 Ch. 20. 4-8. Not long after the division of the Hebrew monarchy they renewed the war with the ten tribes, 1 Ki. 15. 27; 16. 15. To their own hurt they joined in the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, about A.M. 3112, 2 Ch. xx.; Ps. 83. 7-18. Under Jehoram his son they ravaged the kingdom of Judah, and sold multitudes of Jews to the Edomites or Greeks, 2 Ch. 21. 16, 17; Joel 3. 6; Am. 1. 6. Notwithstanding Uziah, king of Judah, had reduced part of their country, they, in the days of Ahaz his unhappy grandson, again took arms, and seized upon part of Judea, 2 Ch. 26. 6; 28. 13; Is. 9. 12. About 20 years after, Hezekiah reduced their whole country to the brink of ruin, 2 Ki. 18. 8; Is. 14. 29-31. Not long after they were attacked by the Assyrians, Is. 20. 1. To expel the Assyrian troops, Psammiticus, king of Egypt, reduced Ashdod by a siege of 29 years. They nevertheless spitefully harassed the Jews when distressed by the Chaldeans. Pharaoh-hophra, in his march to assist Zedekiah, king of Judah, A.M. 3415, smote Gaza their capital. In his march from Tyre to Egypt, A.M. 3432, Nebuchadnezzar, provoked with their attempts to assist the Tyrians, desolated their country, burned their cities, and murdered the inhabitants. Under the Persian government they recovered a little; but abandoned themselves to pride, idolatry, and bloodshed. Having destroyed Tyre, Alexander the Great, A.M. 3672, marched against the Philistines, whose cities were then garrisoned by Persian troops, took Gaza by storm, demolished its walls, and murdered its inhabitants, or sold them for slaves, and placed Macedonian garrisons in all their fenced cities. About A.M. 3841 Judas Maccabeus, the Jewish deliverer, subdued the whole country of the Philistines. About sixty-five years afterward, Jannæus, his brother's grandson, burned Gaza into a desert, and incorporated the remnant of the Philistines with such Jews as he placed in their country, Ps. 83. 7-17; Is. 14. 29-31; 11. 14; Je. xlvii.; Eze. 25. 15-17; Am. 1. 6-8; Zec. 1. 21; 9. 5-7.

III. The EGYPTIANS descended from Ham, by his son Mizraim, Ge. 10. 6, 13. Their country was about 600 miles in length from north to south, and lay on the north-east of Africa, on the west of the Red Sea, and south-west of Canaan. The river Nile, which runs from south to north, by its annual overflowing rendered the country exceedingly fertile; and at last, dividing itself into several streams, ran into the Mediterranean Sea. Their principal cities were No, Zoan, On, Migdol, Pithom, Rameses, Noph or Memphis, Tahpanhes, and it is said about 20,000 others, Ge. 41. 45; Ex. 1. 11; 14. 2; Nu. 13. 22; Is. 19. 13; Je. 44. 1; 46. 14, 25; Eze. 30. 13-18; Na. 3. 8. It seems that sometimes the southern part of the country was called PATHROS, and the lower part of it EGYPT, Is. 11. 11; Je. 44. 1. Not long after the dispersion from Babel, Mizraim and his family founded their kingdom here, Ge. xi. xii. Their monarchy continued above 1600 years; and their kings were generally surnamed PHARAOH. A terrible famine of seven years, beginning A.M. 2290, had ruined their nation, had not Joseph the Hebrew, by his prudence, saved them alive. By his sale of the corn which he had laid up, he made their fields, their cattle, and persons, the property of their king, Ge. xl.-xlvii. Their cruel oppression of the Israelites, when sojourning among them, drew upon them TEN fearful plagues; and at last all their first-born were slain in one night, and their army drowned in the Red Sea, A.M. 2513, Ex. i.-xiv.

Perhaps provoked by the contempt which Solomon had discovered for their princess, his queen, in collecting his seraglio of women, the Egyptians became his enemies, and protected his opponents. Shishak, who it seems first united Egypt under one king, and extended his empire far and wide into Africa and Asia, A.M. 3034, ravaged Judea, 1 Ki. xi.; 14. 23-28; 2 Ch. 12. 1-9. In his absence his brother rebelled; and after his death his large empire fell into pieces; and Egypt itself bent under the power of the Ethiopians. Provoked with their attempts to assist the Hebrews of Israel and Judah, the Assyrians (I suppose under Sennacherib) for about three years terribly ravaged their country. About A.M. 3330 a civil war broke out among the twelve princes, whom it seems the Assyrian king had constituted his deputies in the land. After it had raged about fifteen years, Psammiticus subdued his eleven competitors. But, notwithstanding all his efforts to restore the power and felicity of the nation, his wars with the Assyrians in Palestine, and his provoking 200,000 of his troops to retire into Ethiopia, greatly weakened it, Is. 19. 1-17; xx.; and perhaps xviii.; Na. 3. 8-10. About A.M. 3390 Pharaoh-nechoh, his son, attempted to extend his power on the ruins of the now falling Assyrian empire; and took Carchemish, a city upon the Euphrates; and rendered the Jewish nation his tributaries. Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldean, soon after, A.M. 3396, gave his troops a terrible defeat; took Carchemish, and pursued the Egyptians to the frontiers of their country, 2 Ki. 23. 29-35; 24. 1-7; 2 Ch. 35. 20-24; 36. 3-6; Is. 19. 1-7; Je. 47. 1; 46. 1-12. Puffed up with the felicity which he and his kingdom had enjoyed in the beginning of his reign, Pharaoh-hophra and his subjects abandoned themselves to pride, idolatry, carnal security, and other impieties. Terrible miseries ensued. Provoked with the unhappy issue of his expedition against the Cyrenians, many of his own subjects took arms against him. Making Amasis, his general, their king, they routed his hired troops, and took himself prisoner. They even obliged Amasis to deliver him into their hands, and ignominiously strangled him. Meanwhile Nebuchadnezzar, to revenge the Egyptians' attempts to assist the Jews or Tyrians against him, invaded their country, A.M. 3432; routed their armies; murdered the inhabitants, or by terror drove them out of the land; seized on their wealth; burned their cities; and carried off their idols. For about forty years, the once populous country of Egypt continued almost utterly desolate, Je. 44. 29, 30; 43. 8-13; 25. 9, 19; 46. 13-26; Eze. xvii. xxix.-xxxii.; Is. 19. 1-17.

The Chaldean empire being ruined A.M. 3466, the Egyptians under Amasis attempted to recover their freedom. But Cyrus of Persia, marching his troops into their country, obliged them to acknowledge his authority. After his death Amasis quickly revolted from the Persian yoke. But Cambyses, A.M. 3478, marched against them; and placing before his troops cats, dogs, and other animals which the Egyptians adored, he easily stormed Pelusium, their principal frontier on the north-east. He cruelly ravaged the country; murdered the inhabitants; killed their deified animals; abused and slew their priests; demolished their temples; and transported about 3000 of their idols to Persia. About A.M. 3517 the Egyptians again revolted from under the Persian yoke. Darius Hystaspes prepared to reduce them. After his death, Xerxes his son ravaged their country and rendered their bondage more grievous. Instigated by Inarus, king of Lybia, whom they had acknowledged their sovereign, they again revolted about A.M. 3540. In a bloody war of six years Artaxerxes Longimanus reduced the most of them. About 3590, Amyrtæus, who had for some time reigned in the fen country, furiously attacked the Persian garrisons, and drove them quite out of Egypt. After the Egyptians had struggled with the Persians for their liberty about sixty years, a furious intestine war between Nectanebus and a Mendesian prince exhausted their strength. Taking this opportunity, Artaxerxes Ochus and his Persian troops, about 3650, ravaged their country with inexpressible barbarity; murdered the inhabitants; demolished their temples; and returned home laden with booty. In A.M. 3672 Alexander the Great marched his Grecian troops into Egypt. Wearied of the Persian yoke, the Egyptians readily submitted to him as their powerful deliverer. For about 323 years after this they were governed by the Grecian Ptolemies, under four or five of whom their country bade fair to recover its ancient splendour. About A.M. 3995 the Romans reduced it into one of their provinces, and retained it under their yoke about 650 years. In A.D. 640 the Saracens conquered it, and established in it their Mohammedan delusion, which has ever since been the authorized religion. About A.D. 970 the Moslem caliph of Cyrene wrested it from the caliph of Bagdad. He and his posterity governed it 200 years. About A.D. 1171 Saladin the Kurd craftily seized it for himself; and he and his descendants governed it about 80 years. For the next 275 years it was ruled by Mameluke slaves; 24 of them Turks, and 23 Circassians. Since 1525 it has been oppressed by the Ottoman Turks. All the principal families being transported to Constantinople, a Turkish Pacha, with 24 subordinate Begs, all originally slaves, govern it, under the Grand Seignior. Thus for more than 2000 years backward Egypt has never been governed by a proper native of the country; nor has any nation under heaven been so remarkably governed by the basest of slaves. Meanwhile, a mad propensity to the most stupid idolatry or superstition, brutish ignorance, sloth, cowardice, dishonesty, deceit, cruelty, murderous malice, and inclination to sodomy, have formed the great lines of their national character, Is. 19. 1-17; xx.; and perhaps xviii.; 27. 1; 30. 1-6; 31. 1-3; 43. 3; Je. 25. 9, 13, 19; Je. 46. 13-26; Eze. xxix. xxxii.; Da. 11. 5-25, 42, 43; Joel 3. 19; Zec. 10. 11; 14. 18.

IV. The CUSHITES or ETHIOPIANS descended from Ham's eldest son. For many ages part of them resided on the south-east of Babylon and west of Persia. That country is still called Susiana or Chusistan, i.e. the country of Cush, Ge. 10. 6, 7; 2. 13. The CUSHITES, whom the king of Assyria transported to Canaan, were no doubt the remains of them in that place, 2 Ki. 17. 24, 30; Ezr. 4. 9, 10. Part of these Cushites, after long continuance about Babylon (Ge. 10. 8-10), moved westward into Arabia, and for a time dwelt about the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, Hab. 3. 7; Nu. 12. 1. From thence part of them gradually emigrated into Abyssinia, southward of Egypt, Es. 1. 1; 8. 9; Je. 13. 23. During the civil war which happened in Egypt, after the death of Shishak, about A.M. 3050, Zerah the Ethiopian (2 Ch. 14. 9-13) seems to have seized on that kingdom. About A.M. 3278 Sabacon, another Ethiopian, reduced Egypt a second time, and entered into a confederacy with Hoshea, king of Israel, against the Assyrians, 2 Ki. 17. 4. Tirhakah, who marched to the assistance of Hezekiah, king of Judah, was probably the same as Sethon his successor. When Sennacherib, Sennacherib, or Esarhaddon his son, for three years ravaged the land of Egypt, part of Ethiopia shared the same fate, Is. xviii. xx.; 43. 3. Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean, and Cyrus and Cambyses, kings of Persia, in their turns ravaged the northern parts of Ethiopia. Since that period the Romans, Saracens, and Turks, who have been successively governors of Egypt, have frequently harassed the northern Ethiopians. And sometimes the savage Gallas and Giagas from the south have almost desolated their country. Ever since the conversion of the eunuch, A.D. 35 (Ac. 8. 26-39), Christianity has been known, and for about 1400 years has had a civil establishment in African Ethiopia, but is much disgraced by ignorance and superstition. Neither the repeated attempts of the Saracen or Turkish Mohammedans, nor of the European Papists, have ever been able to establish in it their respective delusions, Ps. 68. 31; 87. 4; Is. xviii. xx.; 43. 3, 6; 45. 14; 49. 12; Eze. 30. 4, 5; Da. 11. 43; Zep. 2. 12. Part of the Ethiopians will assist Gog and Magog against the converted Jews in the beginning of the millennium, Eze. 38. 5.

V. The AMALEKITES appear to have sprung from Ham, and to have existed as a nation long before Esau or AMALEK his grandson were born, and to have been one of the most ancient and powerful: they had their residence on the south and south-west of Canaan, almost all along from the western gulf of the Red Sea to the bank of the Euphrates, Ge. 14. 7; Nu. 24. 7, 20; 1 Sa. 15. 7; 27. 8; 1 Ch. 4. 39, 40. No token of their connection with the Edomites appears in history; but being allied with the Egyptians, or covetous of booty, they attacked the Israelites in their march from Egypt to Sinai. To punish their behaviour, God not only enabled Joshua to defeat them on that occasion, but appointed the Hebrews to exterminate them from the earth, Ex. 17. 8-16; De. 25. 17-19. Next year they assisted the Canaanites against the presumptuous Israelites, Nu. 14. 45. About A.M. 2639 they assisted the Moabites, and about 2797 the Midianites against Israel—on both which occasions they shared the miserable fate of their allies, Ju. 3. 13; 6. 6. They continuing in their impiety and hatred of Israel, God, about A.M. 2942, appointed Saul to destroy them utterly, which in part he effected. Not long after David cut off a part of what remained. Their alliance against Jehoshaphat, about A.M. 3112, issued to their hurt. About A.M. 3290 the Simeonites cut off many more. By his projecting the utter destruction of the Jewish nation, Haman the Amalekite drew complete ruin upon himself and his friends; since which no remains of the nation are to be found in the histories of mankind, Ex. 17. 14, 16; Nu. 24. 20-22; De. 25. 17-19; 1 Sa. 14. 48; 15. 1-8; 27. 8, 9; 30. 1-20; 2 Sa. 8. 12; 1 Ch. 4. 39-43; Ps. 83. 7-17; Is. iii. vii.-ix.

VI. The EDMITES sprang from Abraham by Esau his grandson. Partly by intermarriages, and partly by conquest, they seized on the country southward of Judea, which had been formerly possessed by the HORITE descendants of Ham. It included the mountains of Seir and Hor, and the provinces of Uz, Dedan, Teman, &c. Their principal cities were Bozrah, Selah, &c. It was of old moderately watered and fertile, Ge. 25. 25, 30; 27. 39, 40; 32. 3; 36. 1-9, 32-39; De. 2. 12; Nu. 20. 23; 33. 37; 34. 3; Is. 21. 11; 34. 5, 6; Je. 49. 7, 8, 22; La. 4. 21; Eze. 25. 12, 13. Like Esau their ancestor, the Edomites were generally given to hunting and war. While the Israelites groaned under their Egyptian taskmasters, the Edomites had become a powerful nation under their kings and dukes. But being excluded from the peculiar privileges of Abraham's seed, they mingled themselves with the heathen; and, learning their ways, abandoned themselves to the slavery of their own sinful lusts, Ge. 36. 10-43; 27. 40; 25. 23; Ex. 15. 15, 16; 1 Ch. 1. 35-54. Notwithstanding repeated entreaties they denied the Israelites a passage through their country into Canaan, but it seems they afterwards behaved in a more benevolent manner, Nu. 20. 14-21; De. 2. 28, 29; 23. 7. For about 400 years after the Edomites seem to have applied themselves much to trade. Elath and Eziongeber, on the Red Sea, were their principal ports. Saul harassed them, 1 Sa. 14. 47; David rendered them tributaries to the Israelites, Ge. 25. 23; 27. 29, 37, 40; 2 Sa. 8. 14; 1 Ki. 11. 15, 16; Ps. lx. cviii. Notwithstanding Hadad's attempt to revolt, they continued 150 years subject to Judah, and were governed by a deputy, Ge. 25. 23; 27. 29, 37, 40; 1 Ki. 11. 15-22; 22. 47; 2 Ki. 3. 7. About A.M. 3112 they entered into a combination with the neighbouring nations to extirpate the Israelites, but almost perished in the attempt, 2 Ch. xx.; Ps. lxxxiii. Not long after they revolted from Jehoram, king of Judah, and with no small bloodshed rendered themselves independent, Ge. 27. 40; 2 Ch. 21. 8-10. To revenge some insult, perhaps of their buying the Jews for slaves from the Tyrians and Philistines, Amaziah invaded their country, and inhumanly murdered many thousands of them, and took Selah their capital. Uzziah his son further ravaged their country, and took Elath, their principal seaport on the Red Sea, 2 Ki. 14. 7; 2 Ch. 25. 11, 12; 26. 2; Am. 1. 6, 9. About A.M. 3264 they ravaged the south parts of Judea, and murdered and took prisoners a great many of the inhabitants, 2 Ch. 28. 17. But God quickly resented the injuries done to his people. The Assyrians in a terrible manner ravaged the country of Edom, and destroyed Bozrah, their new capital. When the Chaldeans, about 3416, burned Jerusalem, and murdered and took captive most of the Jewish nation, the Edomites assisted them, and instigated their utmost severity. But in the righteous judgment of God the same Chaldeans, about five years after, rendered the country of Edom a desolate wilderness. Ever since it has been plagued with barrenness and drought, and has swarmed with serpents. When the Chaldean monarchy was unhinged, in A.M. 3466, the Edomites re-collected themselves. Part of them incorporated with the Ishmaelites on the south, and part of them seized upon the south parts of Judea: these Darius Hystaspes ordered them to evacuate, but with what success we know not. About A.M. 3841 Judas Macabeus, the Jewish hero, offended with the Edomites for assisting the Syro-Grecians against his nation, ravaged their country, slew 40,000 of them, and dismantled Hebron their capital. About thirty-five years after Hircanus his nephew reduced the Edomites, and obliged them to incorporate with the Jews and profess their religion. But just before the sacking of Jerusalem by Titus, a body of Edomites deserted the Jews, and got off laden with booty. Ever since the Edomitic nation has been consigned to oblivion, Nu. xxiv.; Ps. 137. 7; Is. 21. 11; xxxiv.; 11. 14; Je. 25. 9, 21; 27. 3, 6, 7; 49. 7-22; La. 4. 21, 22; Eze. 25. 12-14; 32. 29; xxxv.; 36. 2; Joel 3. 19; Am. 1. 11, 12; Ob. 21; Mal. 1. 4.

VII. The MIDIANITES were the offspring of Abraham by Keturah. Most of them dwelt on the south-east of the Dead Sea, eastward of the Edomites. But part of them, perhaps to shun the idolatrous infection of the rest, took up their residence near the north-east point of the Red Sea; among these Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was a prince or priest, Ge. 25. 2-6; 37. 28; Ex. ii. iii. xviii. About A.M. 2552 the Northern Midianites were subjected to or allied with the Moabites. Their women were peculiarly instrumental in seducing the Israelites to whoredom and idolatry. This their wickedness God punished with the almost utter destruction of their nation, Nu. 22. 4, 7; xxv. xxxi.; Jos. 13. 21. About A.M. 2797 the Midianites rendered the Israelites their tributaries, and ~~at~~ sever years greatly oppressed them. But Gideon, by a handful of troops, reduced them to the brink of ruin. It is probable that their small remains incorporated with the Moabites or Ishmaelites, Ju. vi.—viii. The posterity of Jethro lived among the Jews under the name of KENITES and RECHABITES till the Assyrians and Chaldeans carried them away captive, Ex. 2.21; 18.1,2; Nu. 10.29–32; 24.21,22; Ju. 4.11; 1 Ch. 2.55; 2 Ki. 10.15,23; Je. xxxvi.

VIII. IX. The MOABITES and AMMONITES were the product of Lot's incest with his daughters, Ge. 19.30–33. The Moabites dwelt eastward of the Midianites, along the banks of the river Arnon, which runs westward into the Dead Sea. Their principal cities were Ar, Kir, Bozrah, Heshbon, Elealeh, &c. This country they took from the gigantic Emims, who were the offspring of Ham, De. 2.9–11; Nu. 21.13–15,26; 22.36; Is. xv. xvi.; Je. 48. 1–5, 19–24. The AMMONITES had their residence on the north-east of the Moabites, and east of the Reubenites and Gadites, in the territories which they wrested from the gigantic Zamzummins, another part of the descendants of Ham. Rabbath was their principal city, De. 2.18–22; 3.11; 2 Sa. 12. 26–29; Am. 2.14. When the Israelites, in A.M. 2552, encamped on the border of the Moabites in their way to Canaan, they, and it seems also the Ammonites, invited and hired Balaam to curse that people, that they might be destroyed. But God not only obliged him to bless the Israelites and denounce destruction upon their enemies, but for this cause excluded the Moabites and Ammonites from the congregation of Israel to all generations, De. 23.3–6; Nu. xxi.—xxv.; Ne. 13.1,2. From A.M. 2639 to 2657 the Moabites grievously oppressed the Israelites, but were driven out of Canaan by Ehud, and Eglon their king was slain, Ju. 3.12–30. From A.M. 2840 to 2858 the Ammonites terribly oppressed the Israelites on the east of Jordan, but were reduced by Jephthah, Ju. x. xi. About A.M. 2909 or 2939 Nahash the Ammonite ravaged Gilead, and refused every term of submission but what was inhuman and barbarous; but his army was almost wholly cut to pieces by Saul, 1 Sa. xi. Saul afterwards warred with success upon the Ammonites and Moabites, 1 Sa. 14.47. They both seem to have favoured David while he was persecuted by Saul; but, provoked with their insolent or barbarous conduct, he conquered them both not long after he became king of Israel, Nu. 24.17; 1 Sa. 22.3,4; 2 Sa. 8. 2,11,12; x.—xii.; 1 Ch. xviii.—xx.; Ps. 60.8; 108.9. For about 150 years they continued subject to the Israelites, and after the division of the kingdom, fell to the share of the ten tribes. After the death of Ahab the Moabites rebelled, but were severely chastised by King Jehoram, his son, and his assistants in the war, and their country almost ruined, 2 Ki. 1.1; iii. Both nations joined as principals in the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, but their army perished in the attempt, 2 Ch. xx.; Ps. lxxxiii. The kings of Israel being no longer able to retain them in subjection, Uziah and Jotham, kings of Judah, rendered them tributary; but it is probable they resumed their liberty during the unhappy reign of Ahaz, 2 Ch. xxvi.—xxviii. While the Syrians from the north, or Assyrians from the north-east, ravaged the land of Israel, the Ammonites and Moabites seized on the cities which lay next them, and in the most inhuman manner murdered the inhabitants. God speedily and severely punished their injustice and cruelty. The Assyrians, about 3290, seized their wealth, burned their cities, murdered or carried captive their people, and desolated their country. After the death of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, they resumed their independency. About A.M. 3398 they assisted the Chaldeans in ravaging the kingdom of Judah, and, with the utmost cruelty and insolence, pushed on the ruin of that nation. Not long after Jerusalem was burned to a heap, Nebuchadnezzar, offended with the Moabites and Ammonites for their attempts to assist the Tyrians, and for the murder of Gedaliah, his Jewish deputy, furiously invaded their country; and, by carrying off their wealth, burning their cities, and murdering the inhabitants, rendered it an absolute desert. After the overthrow of the Chaldean empire in 3466, such as remained returned to their country, and successively became the tributaries of the Persians, Greeks, and Romans. Notwithstanding their own servitude they took every opportunity to distress the Jews after their captivity. Provoked with their insults, particularly during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, Judas Maccabeus, with a handful of Jews, about A.M. 3840 invaded the country of the Ammonites, routed their forces, burned their cities, and made slaves of their wives and children. About seventy years after, Jannæus, his grand-nephew, reduced the Moabites into a state of slavery to the Jewish nation, Is. xv. xvi.; 25.10; Je. xlviii.; 49.1–6; Eze. xxv.; Am. i.13–15; 2.1–3; Zep. 2.8–10.

X. The SYRIANS or ARAMITES were the offspring of Shem's youngest son, and of Nahor, the brother of Abraham; perhaps mingled with some Canaanites, Ge. 10.22,23; 22.21,22; 1 Ch. 1.17. Their country lay on the north-east of Canaan and Mount Lebanon: anciently it extended far beyond the river Euphrates to the eastward, and perhaps included most of Mesopotamia, 2 Sa. 10.16. Cushan-rishathaim, who for eight years greatly oppressed the Israelites, was probably the king of the Syrians beyond the Euphrates, Ju. 3.8–10. Their ancient kingdoms were Zoba, Damascus, Hamath, Geshur, Rehob, Ishtob, Maachah, &c., 2 Sa. 8.3,9; 10.6,8; 15.8; 1 Ch. 19.6,8. The Syrians on this side the Euphrates were either conquered by David, about A.M. 2964, or voluntarily submitted, 2 Sa. viii. x.; 1 Ch. xviii. xix. But about sixty years after, Rezon, a servant of Hadadezer, whom David had conquered, formed a kingdom for himself at Damascus, which quickly extended itself over all Syria on this side the river, and proved a terrible scourge to the kingdom of Israel, particularly in the days of Baasha, Ahab, Jehoram, Jehu, and Jehoahaz, 1 Ki. 11.23–25; 15.18–20; xx. xxii.; 2 Ki. 6.8,28,29; 10.32,33; 13.3–7; 2 Ch. 22.5; and even to the kingdom of Judah, which lay further off, particularly in the days of Joash and Ahaz, 2 Ki. 12.17,18; 16.5,6; 2 Ch. 24.23,24; 28.5; Is. 7.1–8; 9.12. But God did not suffer the injuries which they did to his people to pass unpunished. Twice, with a handful of men, Ahab routed their huge armies, and brought them to the brink of ruin, 1 Ki. xx. A preternatural noise terrified them from their cruel siege of Samaria, 2 Ki. vii.; and Joash and Jeroboam, descendants of Jehu, repeatedly routing their armies, reduced them to the very brink of despair, 2 Ki. 13.15–25; 14.25–28.

But more terrible judgments overtook them soon afterwards. Hired by Ahaz, king of Judah, Tiglath-pileser the Assyrian made their wealth a prey, burned their cities, murdered the inhabitants, transported part of the survivors to Media, or caused them to serve in his army against the Israelites, Is. 8.4; 9.12; 17.1–3; Am. 1.3–5; 3.12; with 2 Ki. 16.7–9. During the decline of the Assyrian monarchy the captive Syrians returned and repopled their country. Part of them assisted Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean against the Jews, 2 Ki. 24.2. Not long after, on some provocation, he marched his troops into Syria; burned Damascus, Hamath, Arpad, and other principal cities into heaps of rubbish; and cruelly murdered the inhabitants, or transported them as slaves to his eastern dominions. Under Cyrus the Persian, about A.M. 3466, and his successors, the Syrians once more returned and rebuilt their cities. When Alexander the Grecian conqueror marched this way about 3672, Hadrach, Hamath, and Damascus were obliged to submit. Ever since Syria has been a scene of war, ravage, and bloodshed. Here the Grecian monarchs of Egypt and Syria often conflicted. It was terribly ravaged by Eumenes the Pergamenian, and by Hircanus the Jew, and by the Parthians and others. About A.M. 3939 the Romans reduced it into one of their provinces. Under them it was often plagued with Parthian and Persian invasions, and miserably distressed by earthquakes. From A.D. 634, when the Saracens seized on it, it became a frequent scene of war between them and the Christian emperors of Constantinople. Towards the end of the eleventh century of Christ the Seljukians wrested it from the Saracens, and erected one of their four kingdoms at Aleppo, and another at Damascus. After the European crusaders had held it about a hundred years, rendering it a constant scene of the murder of Turks and of one another, Saladin, the conqueror of Egypt, drove them out of most of it about A.D. 1196. Since that time it has been generally oppressed by the Ottoman Turks, and not a little exposed to the plundering Druses of Lebanon and the roving Arabs. Nor, except at Aleppo and Damascus, is there now anything important but ancient ruins, Is. 17.1–8; Je. 49.23–27; Am. 1.3–5; Zec. 9.1,2.

XI. The ASSYRIANS were the posterity of Ashur, the second son of Shem. They formed one of the most ancient kingdoms in the world. Their residence was on the banks of the Hiddekel or Tigris, eastward of Mesopotamia. Nineveh, their principal city, stood above 500 miles to the north-east of Jerusalem, Ge. 10. 11,12,22; Na. 2.8. About A.M. 3170 God, by Jonah, threatened the wicked Ninevites with immediate destruction; but their solemn fasting and repentance prevented it, Jonah i.—iv. About A.M. 3230 the Assyrians under Pul began to be powerful, and to extend their empire. He and his successors, Tiglath-pileser, Shalmaneser, and Sennacherib, conquered the Medes, Persians, Chaldeans, Syrians, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Israelites, Egypt, and part of Phœnicia, Arabia, and Ethiopia, 2 Ki. 15.19,29; 16.7–9; 17.3–6,24,27; 18.34; 19.12,13,17; Is. 10.7–14; 36. 19; 37. 11–13, 18; 7. 17–25; 8.4; x. xv.—xxiv. xxviii.; Am. i. ii.; Joel 3.2–8; Eze. 31.3–9.

Their transactions in Canaan were the most important. Not long after Pul had laid the Israelites under tribute, Tiglath-pileser, hired by Ahaz, king of Judah, about A.M. 3270, entered Syria; and by murder and captivity of the inhabitants, laid it desolate. The Israelitish territories in Galilee, and on the east of Jordan, soon after shared a like fate. After Shalmaneser had ruined the kingdom of Israel and ravaged the country of the Philistines, if not also of the Egyptians and Ethiopians (Is. xviii. xix.), Sennacherib, his son, provoked by Hezekiah's refusal to pay the tribute which Ahaz his father had promised, prepared to subvert the kingdom of Judah. By valuable presents and a profound submission Hezekiah attempted to avert the stroke. But, contrary to treaty, Sennacherib invaded Judea and took all the fortified cities, Jerusalem excepted. Having defeated Tirhakah the Ethiopian, who came to assist Hezekiah, and ravaged Egypt and part of Ethiopia, or perhaps rather been terrified by that powerful monarch, he marched towards Jerusalem. By Rabshakeh his general, and by his letters to Hezekiah, he insolently defied the God of the Jews to protect them. But he had scarcely terrified the inhabitants of Jerusalem by bringing up his army to Tophet, on the east of the city, when God by a fiery pestilence, or some other awful stroke, cut off 185,000 of his most valiant troops in one night. Leaving his baggage for a prey, he retreated home with the utmost precipitation and terror; but was scarcely arrived when two of his sons murdered him while he was sacrificing to his idol, De. 28. 49-52; Is. 5. 25-30; 7. 8, 17-25; 8. 4, 7, 8; 10. 5-34; xvii. xxii. xxiv. xxvii.-xxxiii.; 9. 4; 14. 25; 17. 12-14; 24. 21, 22; 27. 1; 28. 21; 29. 7, 8; 30. 27-33; 31. 4-9; 33. 1-4, 13, 14, 23; xxxvi. xxxvii. xxv.-xxvii. xxxv.; 2 Ki. xvii.-xix.; 2 Ch. xxxii.; Eze. xxxi.

Esarhaddon, his son, who reigned from about 3296 to 3338, by cession, or conquest, appears to have reunited the kingdom of Babylon to his own. Thither he carried King Manasseh and his fellow-captives of Judah, 2 Ch. x.; 33. 11; Is. 39. 6, 7. About the same time he transported the remnant of the Israelites into the east, and re-peopled their country with his eastern captives, 2 Ki. 17. 24-41; Eze. 4. 2, 10. After his death the Assyrian empire hastened towards ruin. God punished them for their idolatry, their blasphemy of himself, and their oppression of his people; and for their pride, carnal security, whoredom, murder, and deceit. Sennacherib, indeed, defeated the revolted Medes, and destroyed Ecbatan, their capital. But to revenge this, Phraortes, king of Media, about A.M. 3352, invaded Assyria and laid siege to Nineveh. He being slain, Cyaxares, his son, carried on the war with great fury, and once and again renewed the siege of Nineveh. But an irruption of the Scythians into Media obliged him to raise it, and forbore the war for about twenty-eight years; during which, it seems, Nabopolassar, ruler of Babylon, revolted from the Assyrians, and rendered himself an independent sovereign. Sarak, king of Assyria, rendered desperate by the many disasters of his empire, burned his palace upon himself, his family, and his enormous heaps of wealth, amounting, it is said, to about 205 millions sterling. The flames continued raging fifteen days. About A.M. 3398 Cyaxares, having got rid of his Scythian guests, and fixed a peace with the Lydians, renewed his war with the Assyrians. He and Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon laid siege to Nineveh. By contracting alliances, by repairing their fortifications, and by hoarding up provisions, the Assyrians had done what they could to preserve their capital. But while they observed some revel in honour of their idol, or to celebrate some trifling victory, the Medes fell upon their troops while buried in drunkenness and sleep and cut them to pieces. The Tigris, or some river which runs into it, high swelled by excessive rains or by the melting of the Armenian snows, broke down about two miles and a half of the wall of Nineveh. When this inundation subsided, the Medes and Chaldeans furiously rushed in by the breach, probably in the night season, and filled the whole city with ravage, bloodshed, and flames. Quite confounded, the Assyrians and their allies could do nothing effectually for their own defence. Their strongest fortifications were surrendered almost upon the conqueror's demand. The merchants, and perhaps the queen, or the effeminate monarch, fled off in the most precipitate manner; and part of them took up their quarters in the Carduchian hills adjacent. The confederated Medes and Chaldeans, having plundered Nineveh of everything valuable, and murdered most of its inhabitants, burned it into a ruinous heap, to the great joy of the oppressed tributaries. It was never rebuilt; nor, for these 2000 years past, has any one exactly known where it stood. About A.M. 3750 the Persians built a city of the same name near Mosul, on the east of the Tigris; but the place of it too has, for many ages, been scarcely discernible, Eze. 31. 10-17; 32. 22; Na. i.-iii.; Mi. 5. 6; Zep. 2. 13-15.

XII. How long the ancient kingdom of Babylon, or Shinar, established by Nimrod (Ge. 10. 9, 10; 14. 1), continued we cannot certainly determine. The CHALDEANS appear to have sprung from Arphaxad, the third son of Shem. For many ages after Abraham left their country they were perhaps little better than a thievish banditti, Ge. 11. 28; Jos. 24. 2, 3; Ne. 9. 7; Job 1. 17. About A.M. 3260 Pul, or Tiglath-pileser, probably formed them into a regular nation, and made Baladan or Nabonassar, his younger son, king, 2 Ki. 20. 12; Is. 23. 13; 39. 1, 2. By some means or other Esarhaddon, about A.M. 3310, reunited Chaldea to his Assyrian empire, and he and his son retained it about sixty years. At last Nabopolassar, the governor of it, and perhaps the just heir to the throne, rendered himself king. About A.M. 3399 Nebuchadnezzar, his son succeeded him, and erected a new empire, or rather a continuation of the Assyrian, in another branch of the ancient royal family. Raising an army of 300,000 warriors, he routed the troops of Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt, at the Euphrates, and took Carchemish, putting all the garrison to the sword. Having assisted Cyaxares, the Mede, in the overthrow of Nineveh, he, with a formidable army of Chaldeans, Scythians, and others, subdued the Syrians, Jews, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and part of the Arabs. Enraged by the Tyrians' withdrawal of their persons and wealth, after he had besieged them for thirteen years, he wreaked his fury upon the Philistines and Egyptians who had assisted them, and terribly alarmed, if not ravaged, Ethiopia and Lybia. On the east he reduced the Medes and Persians or Elamites. Wherever he prevailed, by burning the cities, and by murdering or transporting the inhabitants, he generally left behind him a desolate wilderness. Their princes he either murdered or condemned to perpetual imprisonment; and the people who survived were generally made slaves in Chaldea, Is. 14. 4-6, 12, 16, 17; xv. xxiv.; 39. 6, 7; 2 Ki. 20. 17, 18; Je. 51. 20-23; 25. 9-38; 27. 3-7; xix. xxi. xxiv. xxxix. xli.-xlix.; Hab. 1. 6-17; 2. 5-17; Da. 2. 37, 38; 4. 12, 22; 5. 19; 7. 4; Zec. 6. 2; De. 28. 49-52; Is. 5. 25-30; Eze. iv.-vii. ix. xvii. xix.-xxxii. xxxv.

Having finished his conquests, Nebuchadnezzar abandoned himself to idolatry, pride, and other impieties. Out of his immense spoils he formed a monstrous golden image for Bel his principal god, who, he imagined, had rendered him so successful; which, together with its pedestal, was at least 90 feet high and 9 in breadth. His subjects were peremptorily commanded to worship it, under pain of being immediately burned, Is. 46. 6; Je. 10. 2-15; Hab. 1. 11, 16; 2. 18, 19; Da. iii. By expending his spoils and employing his captives, in his buildings at Babylon, he rendered it the wonder of mankind. Its walls were 87 feet broad, 350 high, and about 60 miles in circuit; and were fortified with 250 if not 316 towers, at proper distances. His success swelled his pride to an uncommon pitch. To punish it, God, by a kind of delirium, rendered him for seven years like a brute. At last his reason was restored, and he acknowledged God's dominion over him. He was reinstalled in his throne, and soon after died, A.M. 3443, having reigned two years with his father and forty-three by himself, Da. iv.; v. 18-21.

The Chaldeans' contempt of God; their idolatry, astrology, magic, and sorcery; their carnal security, luxury, and avarice; their barbarous murder and oppression of the Jews and other conquered nations, now began to be punished by God. Notwithstanding the prudent endeavours of Nitocris, his Median queen, Evil-Merodach was noted for nothing but folly and riot. By badly abusing some of the Medes at a hunting match, he laid the foundation of a ruinous war with that nation. In the third year of his reign Neriglissar, his sister's husband, murdered him and reigned in his stead. Jealous of the growing power of the Medes, he marched against them with a prodigious army of his own troops, besides 150,000 whom he had hired from Lydia, Phrygia, Cappadocia, Arabia, &c. Cyrus the Persian, who commanded the Median troops, routed this huge host with an army scarcely a third part of their number. Neriglissar was slain. Laboroschard, his infant son, who succeeded him, the people murdered, when he had reigned but nine months, noted for nothing but the cruelty of his administrators; and Belshazzar, the son of Evil-Merodach, reigned in his stead. Gobrias and Gadates, two Chaldean lords, provoked, the one by the murder of his son, and the other by the castration of himself, had revolted to Cyrus and drawn the provinces which they governed along with them. Having in two years subdued the nations which it was probable would assist the Chaldeans, Cyrus ravaged their country and marched against Babylon, their capital. Here Belshazzar's troops had shut themselves up, having stored the city with provisions sufficient for twenty years. For two years Cyrus besieged Babylon without any success. At last in A.M. 3466, informed of the approach of their annual idolatrous revel, on which Belshazzar profaned the sacred vessels of the Jewish temple, in libations to his idols and in ministering to his drunkenness, he brake down the bank at the head of the new canal which Nitocris had dug for preventing the Euphrates from overflowing the country. By this means he diverted the river from its ordinary passage through Babylon. No sooner was the channel emptied of water than Gobrias and Gadates led part of his troops down, and others up, the channel into Babylon. The drunken Chaldeans having left their gates on the river quite open, the Medo-Persian troops rushed in thereat and opened the other gates to their fellows. While the intoxicated Chaldeans partly lay buried in sleep and vomit, and partly ran up and down to inform the distant corners of the city that the Persians had entered it; while the merchants, husbandmen, and hired troops laboured to escape for their lives, while every part of the city was filled with consternation, howling, and desperate sorrow; the Medes, Persians, Phrygians, and others of Cyrus' army, furiously spread burning and bloodshed on every side. While the flames of the city ascended to heaven, the streets ran with the blood of murdered warriors, princes, magicians, and even of innocent babes, dashed against the stones. Belshazzar and his thousand lords were despatched in their drunkenness and sleep. His whole family and friends were miserably murdered or ignominiously reduced. Many of his subjects' carcasses rotted above ground, or were devoured by beasts or interred like brutes. Bereaved of their husbands, the delicate ladies and others were ignominiously ravished or cruelly murdered. The immense riches of the city became a spoil. The temples were pillaged. The idols Bel, Nebo, Merodach, Nergal, Sheshach, &c., were broken to pieces, and the metal carried off for a prey. The sacred vessels of the Jewish temple, which were found in the temple of Bel, were carefully preserved, and afterwards restored to the Jews. Not a little of the city being burned, and its high walls broken down, the whole constitution of the empire was unhinged; and the people who remained alive reduced to the basest servitude, under the Medes, Persians, Jews, and other nations, who had lately been their captives.

Recovering themselves under the mild government of Cyrus, encouraged by the confusions which followed upon the death of Cambyzes his son, and provoked that Darius Hystaspes had quite deserted their city and fixed his residence at Shushan in Persia, the Babylonians, after four years spent in preparations, in A.M. 3487, made an open revolt. For twenty months Darius in vain besieged them with all his forces. To prevent a surrender through want of provision, the besieged strangled all their unnecessary eaters, old men, children, and most of their women. After fixing the plot with his master Darius, Zopyrus, a Persian general, having fearfully mangled his face, fled over to the Babylonians, pretending that Darius had thus abused his body for his advising him to raise the siege. They readily credited his pretences, and made him commander of a body of their troops. With these he made several successful sallies upon the retiring besiegers; and his success quickly procured him the command of the whole Babylonian army and of the whole city. He seized the first opportunity to open, for his master's troops, two of the principal gates. Darius, thus master of the place, impaled 3000 of the principal rebels and pardoned the rest; and from the neighbouring provinces supplied them with 50,000 wives. He lowered their walls three fourth-parts of their height. About A.M. 3680, Babylon remained still pretty considerable; and Alexander the Great resolved to restore it to its ancient grandeur; but Seleucus, his Syro-Grecian successor, having drained it of about 500,000 of its inhabitants to people his new city of Seleucia, in the neighbourhood, it quickly dwindled into a mere desert, and the Euphrates, overflowing part of it, turned it into a lake or fen. Before the birth of our Saviour, Strabo, and after him Pliny, represent it as utterly desolate, nothing remaining but the walls. About A.D. 400 Jerome represents it as a hunting-park for the Persian kings. For many ages past no one knows certainly where it stood. The supposed seat of it is so haunted with venomous and doleful animals, that it cannot be safely approached but during the winter cold, which renders these creatures torpid or confines them to their holes, Ps. 137.8,9; 79.6; Mi. 4.10-13; 5.5,6,15; 7.10; Is. 41.2,3,25; 42.13-15; 43.14; 44.25; 45.1-3; 46.1,2,11; 48.14; xxi. xiii. xiv.; Je. 10.25; 12.14; 25.12-14,26; 27.7; 1. li.; Hab. 2.3-19; Da. v.; 7.4,12; Zec. 6.6,8; 5.5-11; De. 32.35-43.

XIII. The MEDES sprang from Japheth, by his son MADAI. The ELAMITES, or PERSIANS, from ELAM, the eldest son of Shem, whose name they ordinarily bear in Scripture, Ge. 10.2,22; 14.1; Is. 21.2; Ac. 2.9. Both of these were conquered by the Assyrians. Part of both served in Sennacherib's army against the Jews, Is. 22.6. The Medes, instigated by Dejoces, about A.M. 3294, revolted from under the Assyrians, and rendered the Persians their tributaries. About 110 years after, assisted by the Chaldeans, they overturned the Assyrian empire and destroyed Nineveh. Both, but especially the Persians, were obliged to submit to the Chaldeans; and Nebuchadnezzar built himself a magnificent palace at Shushan in Persia, Je. 25.9,25; 27.7; 49.34-39.

Cyrus, who is so often marked out in the predictions of Scripture, advanced the glory of both nations to its highest pitch. Having long commanded the Median troops of Astyages, his mother's father, and of Darius her brother and his own father-in-law, against the Chaldeans and others, he became heir to the Persian crown by his father, and to the Median by his wife, Da. 9.1; 5.31. Under his command the Medo-Persian troops conquered the three powerful kingdoms of Lydia on the north, Babylon in the middle, and Egypt on the south; all to the westward. The multitudes he slew, and the spoils he seized, were astonishing; Is. 41.2,3,25, 45.1-3; 46.11; 48.14; xlviii. xxi. xiii.

xiv.; Je. 1. li.; Da. 2.32,39; 7.5; 8.3,4,20; Zec. 6.2,6,8. Most of the captives who had been enslaved by the Chaldeans, he allowed to return and repeople their desolated countries. To the Jews he also restored their sacred vessels; and solemnly encouraged and kindly assisted them to rebuild their temple; 2 Ch. 36. 22,23; Is. 45.13; 44.28; Ezr. i.; 6.2-5. He established his empire according to the most just and prudent regulations; but Cambyses, his madly cruel son and successor, almost ruined it by his expedition into Egypt and Ethiopia. Artaxerxes Smerdis, the magian impostor, throughout his reign did nothing more than obstruct the building of the Jewish temple, Ezr. 4.6-24. Darius Hystaspes, who encouraged the building of it, and who was perhaps the AHASUERUS who divorced Vashti, married Esther, advanced and pulled down Haman, and rendered Mordecai his chief minister of state, extended the empire to its utmost greatness. The conquests and government thereof reached into Iberia, Albania, Colchis, and Scythia on the north; into Lesser Asia and its islands, Syria, and Canaan, on the west; and into Egypt, Ethiopia, part of Arabia, and India, on the south; Ezr. v. vi.; Es. i.-x.; Da. viii. 3,4; 7.5.

Provoked with the European Greeks for assisting their rebellious brethren in Lesser Asia and the Egyptians, and for giving his father's troops a terrible defeat, Xerxes, furnished with the immense spoils of Cyrus and Cambyses, and with the hoarded wealth of Darius his father, madly resolved to extirpate that nation. While the Carthaginians, by his instigation, attacked them in Sicily and Italy, about A.M. 3526, he marched an unwieldy army of several millions into Greece. The Greeks having defeated his armies and fleets, began to think of conquering his whole empire; and the struggles of the Egyptians to recover their liberty had afforded them an excellent opportunity, had not their own contentions and treachery prevented their improving it. Agesilaus the Spartan once seemed on the point of overturning it. In their lingering or often-repeated wars the Greeks more and more perceived the luxury, folly, and weakness of the Persian state. About A.M. 3671 Alexander the Great of Macedonia, having perfected the reduction of Greece into one kingdom, marched an army of about 35,000 excellent warriors (Egeatæ, or goatish men, armed with brass), headed by the most prudent generals, against the Persians, whose emblem of royalty then was the golden head of a horned ram. Highly provoked by the insolent messages of Darius Codoman their king, Alexander furiously routed their huge armies in the great battles of Granicus, Issus, and Arbela; and by overrunning rather than fighting, in six years subdued the whole Persian empire, Ge. 9.27; Nu. 24.24; Da. 2.32,39; 7.5,6; 8.3-7; 10.20; 11.2,3; Zec. 6.2,6,8. About A.M. 3754 the Parthians, who perhaps were chiefly Scythians and Gauls, formed a powerful kingdom in Persia, which continued about 482 years, and sometimes extended from the Indus on the south to the Hellespont on the north. It was long the distinguished terror of the Roman empire. About A.D. 220 or 232 the government was transferred to another nation, or at least to another family. This Persian kingdom was a terrible plague to the Christian emperors, especially to those of the East; and was a most inveterate and cruel persecutor of other Christians. Ever since A.D. 634 Persia has been a distinguished scene of the most shocking miseries, oppression, murder, and almost everything horrid, under the Saracens, Seljukians, Tartars, Turk-mans, Sophis, and modern usurpers, Da. 2.44,45; 7.12.

XIV. The GREEKS, comprehending the Athenians,

Spartans, Æolians, Ionians, Dorians, &c., sprang from Javan, the fourth son of Japheth. When they first removed from Lesser Asia into the south-east of Europe we cannot certainly determine; but about A.M. 3150 several colonies, chiefly Æolians and Ionians, returned from their over-stocked countries in Europe to the western parts of Lesser Asia. While the Greeks with great assiduity cultivated different branches of literature among themselves, they gradually penetrated into the Persian territories; and about A.M. 3672, under Alexander the Macedonian, they reared up an empire of their own upon the ruin of the Persian, less opulent and showy, but much more powerful and warlike, Ge. 9.27; Nu. 24.24; Da. 2.32,39; 7.6; 8.5-7,20,21; 10.20; 11.3; Zec. 6.3,6,8.

Scarcely had Alexander spent twelve years in over-running the world, when he died, perhaps of drunkenness, in the very flower of his age. His whole family was quickly extirpated. His queen Statira, the daughter of Darius, was murdered by Roxana, another of his wives, and thrown into a well. Eurydice, another wife, and Philip Arideus, his brother, were murdered by Olympias his mother. For this Olympias herself was murdered by Cassander's soldiers. Roxana and Alexander Ægus, her son, whom Eumenes had for a time so bravely supported, were privately murdered by Cassander. About a year after he murdered Barsine, the only surviving wife of Alexander, and Hercules her son. Antigonus, one of his generals who attempted to govern the whole empire, being reduced, it was divided into four parts; to each of Alexander's remaining principal generals a part. Cassander had Greece in Europe on the west. Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia, &c., on the north. Seleucus Nicator had Syria and other eastern provinces. Ptolemy Lagus had Egypt, &c., on the south. Lysimachus' share was quickly wrested from him; and most of it united to Syria. Cassander's share was soon after divided into the several states of Macedonia, Achaia, Ætolia, &c. About A.M. 3856 most of it was reduced by the conquering Romans, Da. 7.6; 8.8,22; 11.4; 2.40; 7.7,19,23.

The thigh-like kingdoms of Egypt on the south of Canaan, and of Syria on the north, long subsisted. Ptolemy Lagus, surnamed the Saviour, ruled over Egypt, Canaan, Phenicia, Hollow Syria, Caria, Cyprus, part of Arabia, and the Egean Isles. Seleucus Nicator, or conqueror, who founded his empire in A.M. 3692, was still more powerful; ruling over not only Syria, but Persia, Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Armenia, Media, Pontus, and almost all Lesser Asia; from which, after about sixteen years' contest, he drove Demetrius, son of Antigonus; and to which, after the death of Lysimachus in A.M. 3723, he added Thrace and part of Macedonia in Europe. But his son Antiochus Soter's wars with the Gauls, Bithynians, and Pergamenians, together with the revolt of the Parthians that ensued, exceedingly weakened the kingdom. Wearied with their ruinous contentions, Ptolemy Philadelphus of Egypt and Antiochus Theos of Syria, about A.M. 3756, agreed to a mutual peace. Ptolemy carried his daughter Berenice into Syria; persuaded Antiochus to divorce Laodice his queen and spouse Berenice, and settle the crown on her children. But Ptolemy was scarcely dead when Antiochus divorced Berenice, recalled Laodice to his bed, and settled the crown of Syria upon Seleucus Callinicus her son. To prevent Antiochus changing his mind, Laodice quickly despatched him by poison, and fixed her son on his throne about 3758. Berenice, her child, and all her Egyptian attendants, were murdered before the Lesser Asians or Egyptians could come up to protect them. To revenge the death of his sister, Ptolemy Evergetes of Egypt marched his troops into Syria, reduced most of that kingdom, and returned home laden with rich spoils, and with 2500 Egyptian idols, which Cambyses the Persian had carried off about 300 years before. These, to the great joy of his subjects, he replaced in their temples. In his return through Canaan he offered a solemn sacrifice of thanksgiving to God at Jerusalem, Da. 11.5-9.

After he had been terribly plagued by Hierax his brother, and by Eumenes, king of Pergamus, Seleucus was taken prisoner by the Parthian revolters. His sons, Ceraunus and Antiochus the Great, resolved to be revenged on Ptolemy, and to recover what their father had lost. Death carried off both Ceraunus and Ptolemy while they prepared for the war. Ptolemy Philopater succeeded his father in Egypt. Antiochus routed his forces at Berytus, and recovered Phenicia and Hollow Syria. Whether he executed his purpose of ravaging Egypt we do not certainly know; but next year he marched his forces to Egypt, intending to wrest that kingdom from its luxurious prince. But Ptolemy routed his army at Raphia, a city on the north-east border of Egypt, and obliged him to restore Canaan and Hollow Syria. In his return from viewing these provinces, Ptolemy at Jerusalem offered sacrifices of thanksgiving to JEHOVAH. But highly enraged that the terrors of God or the importunity of the Jews had hindered his entrance into the holy of holies, he caused about forty or sixty thousand Jews to be inhumanly massacred in Egypt. He granted the Syrians a peace upon the easiest terms, that he might have leisure to wallow in lewdness with Agathoclea his harlot, and her infamous brother. Offended with his baseness, many of his subjects revolted. Nor was it long before he died of his debaucheries. Ptolemy Epiphanes, his infant son, succeeded. Antiochus of Syria therefore agreed with Philip of Macedonia to conquer the Egyptian dominions, and to share them betwixt them. Ptolemy being solely governed by Agathoclea, his father's catamite, his subjects were upon the very point of revolting; and several seditions actually happened. The Alexandrians at last took arms, and put Agathoclea, his sister, and his friends, to death. Scopas, Ptolemy's general, who perhaps himself intended to ascend the throne, recovered Canaan and Hollow Syria; but Antiochus by three or four bloody battles retook them. Assisted by the Jews, whom he honoured with distinguished favours, he marched his army into Egypt to conquer it. But finding that the Romans, whose resentment he dreaded, had taken young Ptolemy under their protection, he resolved to make himself master of it by fraud. Having bribed his beautiful daughter Cleopatra to betray or murder her future husband, upon the first opportunity he married her to young Ptolemy; and assigned him Phenicia, Hollow Syria, and Canaan, for her dowry. But Cleopatra, regardless of the horrid mandates or bribes of her father, faithfully adhered to the interests of her husband; and the Egyptian generals suspecting Antiochus' intentions, kept themselves on their guard. Enraged to see his designs on the kingdom of Egypt wholly disappointed, Antiochus, with a fleet of 300 ships, and a formidable army, rendered himself master of several coasts of Lesser Asia, Thrace, and Greece, and of Samos, Euboea, and other islands in the eastern part of the Mediterranean Sea. Informed afterwards of Ptolemy's death, he once more prepared to wrest the kingdom of Egypt from his infant grandson; but a terrible storm, and the death of Scopas, who intended to betray that nation, prevented him. Instigated by Hannibal, the famous and now fugitive general of the Carthaginians, he, assisted by some of the European Greeks, next commenced a war upon the Romans. To revenge this affront, together with the injury which he had done to their allies in Lesser Asia, the Romans quickly engaged him. Acilius their general routed his army in Greece, and drove him quite out of Europe. Livius and Emilius at different times defeated his fleets. Lucius Scipio, with an army of 30,000, routed his army in Lesser Asia, slew 54,000 of them, stripped him of all his dominions to the northward of Mount Taurus, and condemned him to pay 12,000 talents of silver to the Romans, for defraying the expenses of the war with him. Covered with shame and disgrace, Antiochus retired to the inmost parts of his kingdom, where, attempting to pillage a temple of Jupiter at Elymais in Persia, for money to pay his Roman debt, he was murdered by the infuriated mob. Seleucus Philopater his son, who succeeded him, was remarkable for nothing but raising of taxes to defray his father's Roman debt; and for an unsuccessful attempt by Heliodorus his minister to pillage the temple of God at Jerusalem. Not long after the same Heliodorus poisoned his master for the sake of his throne, Da. 11.10-20.

Not Demetrius his son, but Antiochus his brother, succeeded him, A.M. 3829. He had been some years at Rome as a hostage, or pledge of security, for the payment of the Roman debt; and was one of the most base, frantic, and mischievous persons that ever breathed. By flattering the Romans to befriend him; by flattering Eumenes, king of Pergamus, to assist him; and by flattering the Syrians to submit to him, he peaceably fixed himself on the throne. Having quickly routed the forces of Heliodorus the usurper, of Demetrius, the true heir to the crown, and of Ptolemy Philometer of Egypt, who claimed it in right of his mother, he distributed his spoils among his subjects, which exceedingly gained him their affection. Highly piqued that Euleus and Lenæus, the curators of young Ptolemy, should have demanded for their master the provinces of Phenicia, Hollow Syria, and Canaan, which had been assigned for his mother Cleopatra's dowry, but it seems had never been delivered up, Antiochus, having repaired the fortifications of these countries, marched his army into Egypt with an intention to conquer it. His incomplete victory on the border of Egypt obliged him to return home. Next year he invaded Egypt afresh, and Alexandria excepted, ravaged most of it. While his deputy governors treacherously surrendered the island of Cyprus, the effeminately educated monarch of Egypt did almost nothing in defence of himself or his subjects. Perhaps he was taken prisoner by his uncle Antiochus. It is certain they feasted together, and formed a league of amity which neither of them intended to keep; but both were baulked of their treacherous intentions. In his return homeward, Antiochus in cold blood ravaged Jerusalem, murdered 40,000 of the Jews, and made as many slaves. Meanwhile the Alexandrians, finding that Ptolemy their sovereign was entirely managed by his treacherous uncle, made Physcon, his brother, king in his stead. To resent this affront Antiochus again invaded Egypt; but finding it more difficult than he expected to reduce the supporters of Physcon, he returned home, in hopes that the civil war between the two brothers would quickly render the kingdom an easy prey to himself. But suspecting his intentions, the two Ptolemies, Philometer and Physcon, agreed to reign jointly in peace. Informed hereof, Antiochus again invaded Egypt, and ravaged part of it. But Popilius and other Roman ambassadors arriving in Macedonian ships, charged him and all his forces to evacuate Egypt if he regarded the friendship of their state.

Stung with indignation at this disappointment, when all things promised such success; and provoked by the peculiarity of their religion, and by some affronts they had given him; he, in his return to Syria, made terrible work among the Jews. Before this he had turned out Onias the legal high-priest, and sold his office to his treacherous brothers Jason and Menelaus, one after another. Now, assisted by his heathen generals and apostate Jews, he stopped the daily sacrifice; rendered the temple a scene of idolatry and lewdness; compelled the people to eat swine's flesh; and, in fine, attempted, with all his might, to destroy every copy of the Scriptures and every faithful worshipper of God. Meanwhile the Armenians and Persians revolted. The Armenians he quickly reduced; but the Persian mob gave him a furious repulse while he attempted to plunder one of their temples. Informed in his way homeward that Judas Maccabeus and the faithful Jews who assisted him had routed his armies in Canaan, he furiously vowed to extirpate their whole nation. Immediately a horrible distemper seized on his body. His flesh was filled with crawling worms, rotted, and fell off in pieces, with intolerable torment and stench. Convinced that it was the punishment of his horrid abuse and persecution of the Jews and their worship, he solemnly vowed to their God, that if he recovered he would restore their religion and grant them the most advantageous instances of his favour. But his vows were in vain. The inexpressible torment and stench quickly put an end to his miserable life, near Babylon, A.M. 3840, Da. 11.21-35; 8.9-14, 23-25.

Having languished a hundred years more amidst terrible contentions and miseries, the Syro-Grecian dominions, about A.M. 3939, fell into the hands of the conquering Romans. About thirty-five years after, those of Egypt shared the same fate. When the Roman empire was divided, A.D. 338, most of that which had anciently pertained to the Greeks was allotted to the emperor of the East, who had his residence at Constantinople. Their territories in Europe were sometimes terribly ravaged by the Goths, Huns, &c. Those which were in Asia and Africa, about A.D. 640, generally fell into the hands of the Saracens. From them they passed, about 400 years afterward, to the Seljukian Turks. For about three or four hundred years past almost the whole Grecian empire has been subject to the Ottoman Turks, by whose oppression it is fearfully depopulated, Da. 7.12; 2.40; 11.40-43; Zec. 6.7; Re. 8.7-12; ix.

XV. After the rich and bloody empire of the Assyrians and Chaldeans; the prudently formed, moderately wealthy, but inactive, and often basely governed empire of the Medes and Persians; the rapidly formed and powerful, but quickly divided, empire of the brass-armed Greeks; had, according to the immutable purposes of God, and amidst difficulties unnumbered, successively sprung up from contemptible origins; and had finished their work, and filled up the measure of their iniquities, and then dwindled back to their primary meanness: the empire of the ROMANS, who were descended from Japheth by his son Javan or Gomer, succeeded. In this Satan made a more ample display of earthly glory, and erected a more powerful bulwark for the support of iniquity, than had ever before existed. In pride, avarice, murderous cruelty, and tyrannical oppression, chiefly of the people of God, it resembled the preceding monarchies; but in its commonwealth form, which was chiefly directed by two consuls, till at last it was divided into two parts, it differed from them. In policy, power, extent, and terror to every opposer, it far exceeded them. Sprung from the basest origin, these Romans gradually conquered the Italians, Spaniards, Helvetians, Gauls, Britons, Germans, Panonians, Illyrians, Dalmatians, Greeks, Thracians, Lesser Asians, Pontians, Iberians, and Armenians, descended from Japheth; and the Lydians, Mesopotamians, Syrians, Jews, and some Arabs, descended from Shem. They enslaved the Etruscan, Pelasgian, Heracleian, Phenician, and Carthaginian posterity of Canaan, together with the Mauritanian, Getulian, Numidian, Lybian, Cyrenian, and Egyptian descendants of Ham, in Africa. Rome, which was the seat of their empire, stands about 1200 miles north-west of Jerusalem; but the empire itself extended from north to south about 2600, from east to west about 3000 miles. Their conquests extended chiefly to the southward. They successively adopted seven different forms of government. For the first 200 years they had kings. From A.M. 3472 to 3960 they were governed by consuls, tribunes, decemvirs, and dictators, in their turns. After this to A.M. 4480, by emperors, heathen and Christian. From A.D. 476 to 556, they were governed by Gothic kings. Since A.D. 756 the popes have been at once their spiritual and their civil heads, Da. 2. 33, 40-43; 7. 7, 8, 23, 24; Zec. 6. 1-7; Re. 12. 3; 13. 1; 17. 3, 9-11.

About A.D. 44 a terrible famine of seven years' continuance afflicted the empire. Not long after, multitudes of earthquakes happened in it, in Italy, Lesser Asia, and Canaan, and in the isles of Crete, Samos, Chios, &c. Laodicea, Hierapolis, and Colosse were quite overturned, Joel 3. 30; Mat. 24. 7; Lu. 21. 11; Ac. 11. 28; 2. 19, 20. The opposition of the emperors Nero, Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian to the everywhere victorious gospel of Christ, and the cruel persecution of his followers, drew upon their dominions the tremendous justice of God. The noted victories of Vespasian over the Jews in the first century of the Christian era, and of Trajan over the Jews and Parthians in the next, were quickly followed by fearful and bloody disasters. While the Parthians and other heathens murdered the Romans in other countries, the Jews, enraged with the ruin of their nation, city, and temple, murdered about 500,000 or more of them in Cyprus, Cyrene, and Egypt. The slaughter of Jews unnumbered, in revenge of this, did but more and more weaken the empire, Re. 6. 1-4. Whatever zeal Marcus Aurelius and Septimus Severus discovered for common equity and for the support of their subjects, their persecution of the Christians issued in such scarcity of provisions that people were obliged to eat their victuals by weight and measure; and labourers were scarcely able to earn what was necessary for their own subsistence, Re. 6. 5, 6. In the third century of the Christian era the Roman empire became more and more miserable. From 235 to 296 the Christians were generally and sometimes terribly persecuted, and millions of them murdered. In true just resentment of this, twenty emperors and thirty usurpers, after making no small havoc among their opposers, or even their friends, were cut off almost all in a miserable manner. Moreover, while the Persians in the East plagued Syria and the countries adjacent, the Goths, Quadi, Sarmatæ, Suevi, and Vandals ravaged almost all the Roman territories in Europe. Few cities and scarcely one unwall'd town escaped their infernal pillage and murder. Besides fearful earthquakes, a terrible pestilence of fifteen years' continuance pervaded the whole empire from south to north. Multitudes were left unburied. Dogs and other ravenous animals were so accustomed to human carrion that they sometimes entered towns and devoured the living, Re. 6. 7, 8.

The fourth century opened with a terrible persecution of the Christians by Diocletian and his fellow-emperors, which lasted ten years. All on a sudden God pleaded the cause of his persecuted people and meted out justice upon their heathen oppressors. While multitudes were swallowed up by earthquakes or terrified by ill-boding omens in the sky, Constantine, being elected emperor by his troops, and provoked by the designs of his heathen partners in government, took arms against the persecuting emperors and their Caesars or subordinate emperors. While Diocletian abandoned his imperial crown for a private life, Maximinian, Galerius, Maximin, Maxentius, and Licinius were so plagued with repeated discomfitures and disasters that they hid themselves in dens and caves. While some other principal persecutors murdered themselves in the most desperate anguish, Maximin and Licinius publicly acknowledged their disasters to be the just reward of Jesus Christ upon them for persecuting his people. Multitudes of the heathen priests, who had all along been distinguished instigators of the persecutions, were miserably destroyed. Even Maximin and Licinius murdered thousands of them; because by their false predictions of victory they had decoyed them into their ruinous wars with Constantine. In fine, the heathen worship of the sun, moon, and stars, and other idols, was abolished by law, Re. 6. 12-17; Ps. 2. 8, 9; 18. 30-43; 21. 8-12; 35. 26, 27; 40. 14-16; 46. 6-8; 48. 4-11; 59. 12-15; 69. 23-28; 68. 1, 2, 12, 30; 79. 6-13; 83. 9-18; 94. 24; 96. 13; 98. 9; 72. 9; 110. 5, 6; 132. 18; 149. 6-9; Pr. 1. 24-32; Is. 66. 15-17; Joel 3. 9-16; Zep. 3. 8; Hag. 2. 22; Mi. 4. 13; 5. 5-15.

From A.D. 323 to 338 the Roman empire, now Christianized by law, enjoyed a short repose. Meanwhile Constantine repaired the ancient Byzantium, on the north-west of the Euxine Sea, and called it CONSTANTINOPLE, after himself, and rendered it his imperial seat. His death was followed by fearful calamities. The contemporary or separate reigns of his three sons were chiefly marked with mutual contentions one with another; rebellions of Maxentius, Sylvanus, and others; terrible ravages by the Persians and Armenians in the east; and by the Allemans, Scots, and Picts in the west. The short reign of Julian their cousin was principally noted for his crafty and cruel attempts to abolish Christianity and restore heathenism, and his ruinous loss in the Persian war. In A.D. 364 Valentinian divided the empire with Valens his brother, after which this division generally remained. The emperor of the western part resided at Rome, and the emperor of the east at Constantinople. Being now composed of ancient Romans, conquered nations, and invading Scythians, the Roman state became extremely weak and disjointed. Theodosius the Great united its parts, and restored it to some degree of its wonted order and strength. But he dying in 395, and dividing it to his sons Honorius and Arcadius, it gradually became more and more weak and miserable. The Goths under Rhadagaisus and Alaric ravaged Greece, Italy, &c., besieged Rome, murdered about a third part of the imperial subjects, and obliged the western emperor to allow them Gaul (or France) and Spain for their residence. In A.D. 410 Alaric again ravaged Italy and burned Rome. Meanwhile other armies of Goths, Alans, and Vandals almost desolated Gaul and Spain, and took possession thereof. The Vandals crossed the Mediterranean Sea by the Straits of Gibraltar, and by terrible ravage rendered themselves masters of the Roman territories in Africa, and there formed a powerful kingdom. Attila and his infernal Huns for fourteen years ravaged Thrace, Greece, France, and part of Italy in the most barbarous manner, putting almost every one they could find to the sword. The emperor Valentinian III., by promising them an annual tribute, diverted them from their intended attack upon Rome. To revenge the murder of this emperor on his subjects, Eudoxa his queen implored the assistance of the African Vandals. They, under Genseric their king, in A.D. 455, ravaged Sicily and Italy, pillaged Rome, and returned home laden with spoil. The western empire, now terribly desolated, languished about twenty years more under eight short and turbulent reigns. In A.D. 476 Odoacer, whom the Heruli and other barbarians had chosen for their king, deposed the emperor Augustulus; and translated the seat of his own royalty to Ravenna, another city of Italy. His kingdom had scarcely lasted sixteen years, when Theodoric the Ostrogoth unhinged it, and founded another, of about sixty-four years' continuance. Hitherto the Roman consuls, senate, and magistrates had always maintained some vestiges of their ancient power and dignity. But Justinian the emperor of Constantinople, having recovered Africa from the Vandals and part of Italy from the Goths, his successor, Justin II., A.D. 566, totally abolished the distinguished honours of Rome, reduced it to the same level with the neighbouring cities, and made the Exarch of Ravenna his deputy-governor of it. The Romish bishop, about A.D. 606, obtaining an imperial mandate by which he was declared UNIVERSAL BISHOP, immediately began to grasp at civil power. In A.D. 756 he actually became prince of Rome and the two territories adjacent, and restored to that city part of its ancient privileges. The succeeding popes attempted to extend an imperial influence over the nations. Hating the Emperor of Constantinople, the Romans proclaimed Charles the Great, king of France and Germany, their emperor. About A.D. 800 he and the pope established the German empire instead of the Roman; which healed head of the beast will probably continue till the glorious better age commence, Da. 2. 33, 41-43; 7. 8; Zec. 6. 7; Re. 8. 1, 7-12; 13. 2, 3, 15; 12. 3.

About A.D. 480 the western empire had begun to be parcelled out into TEN TOES OR HORNS; i.e. sovereign states of barbarians who came from the East; viz. Huns, Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Franks, Vandals, Suevi and Alans, Burgundians, Heruli and Rugians, Saxons, Lombards. Bishop Chandler classes them thus: the Ostrogoths in Mæsia, the Visigoths in Pannonia, the Suevi and Alans in Spain and part of France, the Vandals in Africa, the Franks in France, the Heruli and Thuringi in Italy, the Saxons and Angles in Britain, the Huns in Hungary, the Lombards on the banks of the Danube, and afterwards in Italy. Sir Isaac Newton arranges them thus: the Vandals and Alans in Africa and Spain, the Suevi in Spain, the Visigoths, the Alans in France, the Burgundians, the Franks, the Britons, the Huns, the Lombards, and the Exarchate of Ravenna. In the eighth century Bishop Newton arranges them thus: the Senate of Rome, the Greek Exarchate of Ravenna, the Lombards, the Huns, the Allemans, the Burgundians, the Franks, the Goths, the Britons, the Saxons. Ever since the fall of the Roman empire it has been generally parcelled out into ten distinct sovereignties, notwithstanding frequent alterations of their form, extent, &c. At present we have the states of Italy, the Two Sicilies, Portugal, Spain, France, Britain, Holland, Germany, Hungary, and Switzerland; or by joining Holland, Hungary, or Switzerland to Germany, we may admit Turkey for a tenth. The different nations of which these states were composed, and their diversified tempers and laws, have rendered their constitutions weak and inconsistent. Da. 2. 33.

41-43; 7.7, 20; Re. 12.3; 13.1; 17.3, 12, 16. For almost 1200 years past these ten sovereignties have, in whole or in part, submitted to the tyranny of the Antichristian popes; but when 1260 from the full manifestation of Popery are finished, they shall renounce his authority and employ their power to abolish it. What alterations these ten states will undergo in their own form, by the general conversion of mankind to Christ in the coming age, we know not, Da. 2. 44, 45; 7. 8, 11, 24-27; Re. 13. 1, 12-17; 17. 12-16.

XVI. ARABIA is of great extent, reaching from Egypt on the west to Persia on the east; and from the Indian Ocean on the south to Canaan; nay, in the east parts, to Syria on the north. The south part of it, between the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, was peopled by the posterity of Joktan, Ge. 10. 26-30; 1 Ch. 1. 20-23. The north parts by the ISHMAELITES, who, when multiplied into their twelve tribes, swallowed up most of the descendants of Keturah, Esau, and Lot, Ge. 16. 10, 12; 17. 20; 21. 9-21; 25. 1-4, 12-18; 36. 1-16; 19. 37, 38. Part of the Ishmaelites anciently traded with the Egyptians in spices; and long after with the Tyrians in spices, ebony, jewels, gold, ivory, precious clothes, and cattle, Ge. 37. 25; Eze. 27. 15, 20-22; but they have generally applied themselves to the management of flocks and herds, dwelling in tents, and roving from place to place, as they found most convenient for pasture, Is. 13. 20; 21. 13; 60. 6, 7; Eze. 25. 4, 5. They have in every age been distinguished for lewdness, robbery, ravage, revenge, and murder; and have been a common nuisance and plague to mankind around them. It was the interest of each of the many conquerors who approached their territories to extirpate them; but none has ever so much as properly reduced them to subjection, Ge. 16. 12. Some of them assisted the Midianites against Israel, and shared in the vengeance of Gideon, Ju. 6. 3; 8. 24. They sent friendly compliments to Solomon; and perhaps the Queen of Sheba was an Arabian, 1 Ki. 10. 1-15; 2 Ch. 9. 1-14. Shishak, the Egyptian conqueror, was obliged to protect his kingdom from their depredations by a deep ditch and line of defence. They complimented Jehoshaphat with some flocks; but quickly after, to their own hurt, they joined in the grand alliance against him, 2 Ch. 17. 10, 11; xx.; Ps. 83. 6-17. They terribly ravaged Judea under Jehoram his son, 2 Ch. 21. 16, 17.

About A.M. 3200 the Gadites and Reubenites gave the eastern Ishmaelites or Hagarenes a terrible defeat, and seized on their territory and wealth, 1 Ch. 5. 15-22. About 3290 the Assyrians ravaged their country. Many of the Kedarenes were murdered and their flocks carried off for a spoil. The Dedanites fled to the woods, where many of them perished by hunger. The Kenites were carried prisoners to Nineveh, Nu. 24. 21, 22; Is. 21. 13-17. About A.M. 3420 Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean ravaged the northern parts of Arabia, put multitudes of the Dedanites, Buzites, Temanites, Scenites, and Kedarenes to the sword, burned their cities, and carried off their wealth for a prey, Je. 25. 9, 23-25; 49. 30-33. Provoked by their contempt of himself, or by their depredations on his subjects, Alexander the Great, about A.M. 3678, in vain resolved to extirpate them. Antigonus, his mighty general, who attempted to succeed him; Pompey, the victorious Roman commander; and the emperors Augustus, Trajan, and Severus attempted to reduce or destroy them in vain. Providence always, and sometimes miraculously, maintained the independency of these wild descendants of Abraham by Hagar, Ge. 16. 12.

About A.D. 608 Mahomet, a crafty Ishmaelite, assisted, it is said, by a villanous Jew and a treacherous Christian monk, under pretence of reforming his countrymen's gross idolatry, contrived a religious system adapted to the then reigning taste of Jews and Christians as well as heathens; promising to those who embraced it manifold carnal enjoyments both in time and in eternity. After spending about fourteen years in private attempts on his idolatrous neighbours, he was obliged to flee from Mecca, the place of his birth, to Medina, where he procured a considerable number of followers, who were called SARACENS. Encouraged by this he altered his plan, and began to propagate his tenets by fire and sword. While a preternatural darkness of the sun, from June to October, presaged their ruinous influence, his army of Saracens prodigiously increased. Like locusts and scorpions, they chiefly ravaged and murdered the nations during the five months of summer; and it was about five prophetic months, or 150 years, before their ruinous power began to decline. The strength of their armies chiefly consisted in cavalry, and their incursions were rapid and violent. Dressed with turbans or mitres, their heads appeared as if crowned; and their captains reckoned themselves on a level with kings. They had beards as men; but plaited their hair as women. They pretended to a masculine religion; but lust for women, revenge, and cruelty chiefly marked their character. Their daring hearts and destructive weapons rendered their inroads alarming and terrible. Their tail, the very scum of their armies, spread misery and death wherever they went; and the delusions they propagated were ruinous and damning. But Abubeker the caliph, or successor of Mahomet, made it a standing law that none should destroy corn or fruit-trees, or hurt any cattle, but when it was necessary for subsistence; and God so managed their conquests and ravages that his faithful servants generally escaped. Nor, though they wreaked their fury upon empty and idolatrous Christians all along, from China to the Atlantic Ocean, could they ever render themselves masters of the Christian capitals of Rome and Constantinople, even though they pillaged the former, and often besieged the latter. By the direction of Satan, and of Mahomet and his successors (CALIPHS), especially for the first eighty years, they murdered an infinity of mankind. In Asia, they conquered Arabia, Canaan, Syria, Chaldea, Persia, Media, Armenia, Assyria, with part of Lesser Asia, India, and Tartary. In Africa they conquered Egypt, Nubia, Libya, Barbary, Fez, and Morocco, and other countries on the north of the river Senegal. In the Mediterranean they seized upon Cyprus, Sicily, and many other islands. In Europe they conquered Portugal and Spain, with part of Italy and France. From A.D. 760 to 910 their power was either at a stand, or more generally on the decline. Their setting up other caliphs in opposition to the mighty lords of Bagdad; the religious differences between the Persians and other Mahometans, and the terrible animosity occasioned thereby; the success of the Christians in Spain; and the perpetual inroads and growing power of the Seljukians in Persia, greatly weakened their authority. Tangrolipix, the Seljukian Turk, about A.D. 1040 or 1055, rendered himself sovereign of Persia, stripped the caliph of Bagdad, who was the chief, of his civil authority, leaving him but a mere shadow of spiritual power.

In A.D. 1260 the Jenghizian Tartars utterly abolished the caliphate of Bagdad. Mostanser the caliph escaped to Egypt, where he and his successors enjoyed a show of spiritual government till, in 1525, that country was conquered by the Ottoman Turks. In A.D. 1610 the Spaniards drove about 900,000 Saracens and Moors out of their country. For more than 400 years past the Ottoman Turks have possessed a great part of their ancient conquests. Others, of Tartarian original, have still longer possessed their kingdom of Persia, Hindoostan, &c. Thus these ISHMAELITES or SARACENS are, after an amazing blaze of earthly grandeur, reduced to, if not below, their ancient baseness. They nevertheless maintain their wonted independency, and still oblige the haughty sultans of Constantinople to pay them a yearly tribute of 40,000 crowns as the condition of their allowing the Turkish pilgrims a safe passage to Mecca, their holy city, Ge. 16. 12; Da. 11. 40; Re. 9. 1-11.

XVII. The Scythians, Tartars, and Turks are the offspring of Japheth, by MAGOG, and perhaps some others of his sons, Ge. 10. 2; Eze. xxxviii. xxxix. They have multiplied exceedingly, and have often made the most terrible irruptions into Europe or Southern Asia. About A.M. 3370, under Madyes or Oguz Khan, they ravaged Western Asia. It seems they intended to have penetrated into Egypt had not Psammiticus, by flattery and compliments, diverted them. It was not till after twenty-eight years, and the massacre of their chiefs by Cyaxares' orders, that they evacuated Media or submitted to its king. Much about the same period they seem to have conquered China. About A.M. 3510 the Scythians carried on a furious war with Darius Hystaspes the Persian. About A.M. 3754 the Parthians founded a powerful kingdom in Eastern Persia, which continued 482 or 475 years. Before the birth of our Saviour the Dacians had begun to ravage the north-east parts of the Roman empire, but were reduced by the emperor Trajan about A.D. 110. The Sarmatæ began their ravaging of Germany about A.D. 69, but were reduced by the Huns about 450, and more fully by the Goths about 500. The Alans began ravaging Media about A.D. 70, and Europe 120; and at last settled in Spain about 409. The Suevi began their ravages about A.D. 85, fixed their residence in Spain 409, and were subdued by the Goths about 585. The Vandals began their murderous incursions about A.D. 166. They ravaged all along from Germany to the Atlantic Ocean, crossed the Mediterranean Sea, and erected a kingdom in Africa 407. Issuing from thence, about 455, they ravaged Sicily and Italy, and pillaged Rome; but about 536 were subdued by Justinian, the emperor of Constantinople. Perhaps the Galles or Gages in the heart of Africa are part of their murderous descendants. About if not before A.D. 215, the Goths began their terrible ravages of the Roman empire. In A.D. 410 they took and burned Rome, and about the same time fixed their residence in Italy, Gaul, and Spain. About A.D. 250 the Franks began their ravages, and about 420 settled in Gaul, which, from them, has been since called FRANCE. The Heruli began their ravages about A.D. 256, and, along with others, abolished the Roman empire in 476, but within about sixty years were once reduced by the Ostrogoths, and again by the emperor Justinian. About A.D. 257 the Burgundi began their ravages, but were reduced by the Franks about 534. About 269 the Gepidæ began their incursions; but about 572 the Lombards, who had just before established a powerful kingdom in Italy, subdued the rest. The Lombards themselves were reduced by Charles the Great of France and Germany about 200 years after. From A.D. 376 the Huns committed the most terrible ravages through a great part of Europe, and at last settled in Hungary. About the same time the Haiathelite or Ephthalite Huns committed the most shocking depredations in the kingdom of Persia. From about A.D. 485 to 1390 the Bulgars frequently ravaged the eastern empire, but were at last reduced by the Ottoman Turks. Whether the Saxons, who so furiously warred in Germany, and who murdered the Britons of England and dwelt in their stead; and the Marcomans, Allemans, and Quadi, who bore their part in ravaging the Roman empire, were also of a Scythian or Tartar original, we cannot determine; nor can we say what desolations were made in Tartary by the emigration of such multitudes towards the west. But it is certain that, by murdering the old inhabitants and one another, a great part of Europe was rendered a shambles of bloodshed and war, and turned into a comparative desert. Nor till many ages afterwards were these countries moderately peopled or cultivated. So general was the destruction that the language, and even the laws, of the Romans or natives were extirpated, and the language of the ravagers, and their feudal system, inhuman diversions, and probations of causes, were everywhere introduced. Thus the robes of the image appeared as formed of iron and clay; and the grizzled horses of the fourth chariot walked to and fro in the earth, Da. 2.33, 41-43; Zec. 6.7; Re. 6.4, 8; 8.7-12.

About A.D. 1000 Mahmud Gazni, with an army of Tartars and others, founded the empire of the Gaznevides in the East Indies, which continued for some ages powerful and flourishing. While the power of the Saracens was on the decline multitudes of Turks had gradually poured themselves from the north-east into Persia and Mesopotamia. They formed four sultanies or kingdoms near to the Euphrates—that of Bagdad in A.D. 1040 or 1055, of Damascus and Aleppo in 1079, and of Iconium in 1080. The first was by far the most powerful. For more than 200 years God, by their own mutual contentions, and by the invasions of the European crusades for the recovery of Canaan, and by the invasions of the Tartars, restrained their motions and kept them as it were bound by the river Euphrates. Arisen from the smallest beginnings, Jenghiz Khan, an eastern Tartar, and his sons, between 1200 and 1260, conquered most of Asia and the east of Europe to the frontiers of Germany. Besides several smaller states in India, &c., they formed the three powerful empires of Kipjak, partly in Europe, and of China and Persia in Asia. None of these continued respectable in the Jenghizian family beyond the ninth or tenth generation. About A.D. 1400 Tamerlane, with a huge army of Tartars, overran Western Asia, murdered an infinity of mankind, many of them in cold blood, and founded the two powerful empires of Persia and Hindoostan,—the last of which, comprehending about thirty-two kingdoms on this side the Ganges, is still governed by his Mogul descendants. Thus God has multiplied Japheth, and made him dwell in the tents of Shem, Ge. 9.27; Re. 9.14.

To avoid the fury of the Jenghizian Tartars, Soliman Shah, a Turkish lord, with his three sons, attempted to cross the Euphrates to the westward. He was drowned in his passage. His two elder sons returned home and submitted to the enemy; and not long after Ortogrul, the youngest, with his sons Condoz, Sarubani, and Othman, crossed the river and obtained from the Seljukian sultan of Iconium a settlement on the western borders of Armenia. Othman, from whom the Turks are still called OTTOMANS, becoming a valiant captain, many of the Seljukians deserted their own sultans and joined him. With these he frequently routed the straggling Tartars or his Christian neighbours. His victories made the Ottoman bands prodigiously increase. The strength of their armies generally consisted in horsemen, of whom they have sometimes had a million in pay. Dressed in blue, scarlet, or yellow livery, they were extremely furious, desperate, and cruel; horrid blasphemers, and mad with zeal for the Mahometan delusion. Assisted by newly-invented fire-arms of a monstrous size, protected by sparkling breastplates, and steelled in heart with courage and fury, for almost 400 years they spread the most tremendous ravage and murder among the apostate Christians in the west of Asia and south-east of Europe. They began their conquests with the taking of Kutahi in Asia, A.D. 1281 or 1302, and ended them with the taking of Kaminiek in Poland, 1672, or at the peace of Carlowitz in 1698. Under their emperors, Othman, Orchan, Amurath I., Bajazet I. (whom Tamerlane the Tartar so terribly routed, and carried about in an iron cage), Mahomet I., Amurath II., Mahomet II., Bajazet II., Selim I., Soliman, Selim II., Amurath III., and Mahomet IV., they made themselves masters of the whole of the eastern Romish empire from Ethiopia on the south to Poland on the north, and from near the Caspian Sea on the east to the Straits of Gibraltar on the west. Few countries mentioned in Scripture escaped their conquering fury. Those which they subdued, though anciently populous, rich, and fertile, were by their murders and tyrannical oppressions rendered a comparative desert. Instead of hundreds or thousands of wealthy and populous cities, none, except Constantinople in Europe; Smyrna, Bagdad, Aleppo, and Erzerum in Asia; Cairo and Alexandria in Egypt; to which we can scarcely add Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli in Africa, now deserve much notice, Ge. 9.27; Da. 11.40-43; Zec. 6.7; Re. 9.12-21.

What tidings from the north and east shall hereafter terrify the Ottoman empire we know not; but in the beginning of the millennium we expect the Turks and their Persian, Ethiopian, Lybian, and Arabian allies to attack the Jews when just converted to the Christian faith and returned to Canaan, and miserably to perish in the attempt, leaving their carcases to fatten the fields and their wealth for spoil, Eze. xxxviii. xxxix; Da. 11.44, 45. In the end of that happy period we expect the descendants of Magog—Russians, Tartars, and Turks, or other like savages, with their wicked auxiliaries—to attempt an utter destruction of the Christians, but to be destroyed by some ruinous plague, Re. 20.8, 9.

XVIII. Notwithstanding God's destruction of the old world by a flood, to purge away its universal corruption, mankind quickly returned to their wonted wickedness, or invented new methods of guilt; and therefore, to preserve religion among them, God selected a peculiar nation for himself. For about 2000 years the Jewish or Hebrew descendants of Shem were the distinguished people of God, Ge. 9.26. Abraham himself was for this purpose separated from the rest of mankind, and he and his promised seed, i.e. those only by Isaac and Jacob, were by solemn covenant adopted into peculiar relation to the Most High. While Abraham himself was a blessing to the nations around, he was also highly favoured by God; and Isaac and Jacob were conceived by a supernatural influence, and were in like manner by their instructions, example, and otherwise, rendered public blessings to mankind. A seed numerous as the sand was promised to these divinely-confederated patriarchs. But to exercise their faith and patience, it had during the first 215 years increased to no more than seventy persons. In the last half of the 430 years prescribed by God for their wandering condition, it increased into about three millions, men, women, and children, notwithstanding terrible oppression and manifold attempts to murder their male children, Ge. 12.1-3; 13.16; 15.4, 5, 13, 14, 16; 17.4-7, 16, 19, 21; 18.10, 14; 21.1-8, 12; 22.17, 18; 25.21-34; 26.3, 4; 27.22-29; 28.3, 14, 15; 31.13; 35.11; xvi.; Ex. i.; De. 7.7; 10.22; 26.5; Jos. 24.2-4; Ps. 105.6-24; Is. 51.2; Ac. 7.2-18.

When the Hebrews had sojourned in Egypt about 215 years, and had for almost a hundred been cruelly oppressed, God, notwithstanding their sinfulness and many compliances with the heathen abominations, did, in A.M. 2513, miraculously bring them forth from their bondage with great honour and wealth, and, by tenfold plagues, severely punished their Egyptian persecutors, Ge. 15.14, 16; 46.4; 50.24, 25; Ex. i.-xiv.; De. 11.2-4; 4.20, 34, 37; 5.15; 6.12, 21, 22; 7.8, 18, 19; 9.26; 13.10; 16.1; 26.6-8; Jos. 24.5-7; Ju. 2.1; 10.11; 1 Sa. 12.6, 8; Ne. 9.9-11; Ps. 66.5-12; 77.14-20; 114.1; 80.8; 81.5-7; 78.12, 43-52; 105.26-38; 106.7-12; 135.8, 9; 136.10-15; 74.12-15; 89.10; Is. 51.9, 10; 63.9-15; Je. 32.20, 21; 2.6; Eze. 16.2-7; 20.5-10; 23.3; Ac. 7.18-36; 13.17.

Notwithstanding their frequent murmurings, renewed rebellions, and repeated idolatries, God for forty years guided and protected them in the wilderness by a miraculous pillar of cloud; fed them with manna from heaven, and with water from the flinty rocks of Rephidim and Kadesh; and twice regaled them with the flesh of quails. In the most solemn manner he gave them his laws, and appointed them governors in church and state for the execution of them. His tabernacle was erected among them, and their tents regularly pitched around it. And having by diversified plagues cut off that wicked generation who contemned his promised Canaan, he, by a miraculous passage through Jordan, and by manifold victories over the natives, gave them the possession of that country. His tabernacle was erected in the middle of the land, his covenant of peculiar friendship renewed with them, and the influences of his Holy Spirit remarkably bestowed upon them, Ge. 12.2, 7; 13.14-17; 15.7-21; 17.7, 8, 21; 21.12; 22.17, 18; 24.60; 26.3, 4; 27.28, 29; 28.3, 4, 13-15; 35.11, 12; 50.24, 25; Ex. 3.8; 6.4-8; 15.13-17; 23.23-31; 33.14; 34.10, 11; Nu. 14.31; 15.1; 26.53-55; 33.51-54; xxxiv.; 35.10; De. 1.7, 8; 4.1; 5.16; 6.1, 3, 10, 18; 7.1, 2, 20-24; 8.7-9; 9.1-3; 11.10, 21-25; 12.9, 10, 29; 26.1; 30.18, 20; 31.13; 32.8-14; xxxiii.; 34.4; Jos. 1.2-6; 3.10-13; 6.3-5; 8.1, 2; 10.8; 11.6; Ex. xv.-xl.; Le. i.-xxvii.; Nu. i.-xxxvi.; De. i.-xxxiv.; Jos. i.-xxiv.; Ne. 9.12-25; Pa. 44.3, 4; 66.11, 12; 77.14-20; 78.12-55; 80.8-11; xc.; 95.8-11; 99.6-8; 105.39-45; 106.7-33; 107.1-7; 114.1-8; 135.10-12; 136.16-22; Is. 48.21; 63.9-14; Je. 2.2, 3, 6, 7; 31.2; 32.21, 22; Eze. 16.2-14; 20.10-23, 35; Ac. 7.36-45; 13.18, 19.

Their situation and fate in Canaan exactly corresponded with the benedictions of Jacob and Moses, Ge. xlix.; De. xxxiii. Their territory was about 180 miles in length from north to south, and 80 in breadth from east to west. The river Jordan (which, taking its rise in Lebanon, and running southward, formed in its course the lake of Merom and the far larger sea of Chinneroth, Galilee, or Tiberias), together with the brooks and rivulets which crossed the country, and a multitude of fruitful hills and valleys, rendered it exceedingly pleasant and fertile. Lebanon on the north, Hermon and Gilead on the east, Tabor in the middle, and North Carmel on the west, were some of the more delightful mountains. This territory comprehended about 9,231,000 acres of ground, which, after saving perhaps two millions for the Levitical cities and for the chiefs of families, allowed each of the 601,730 warriors who conquered it about twelve acres apiece. The arable grounds yielded sometimes sixty or an hundred fold. The rich pastures produced large quantities of milk and honey. Thus, by the blessing of God, their land was fully capable of maintaining its numerous inhabitants. The Reubenites, Gadites, and half-tribe of Manasseh had their portions on the east of Jordan, Nu.xxiii.; De.iii.; Jos.xiii. The portion of the REUBENITES lay on the north-east of the Dead Sea of Sodom, and north of the river Arnon. It included Peor, Nebo, and Pisgah, hills which at present make a very rugged appearance. Their principal cities were Heshbon, Jahaz, Bamoth-baal, Beth-peor, Medeba, Adam, Shittim, Bezer, Mephaath, Beth-jeshimoth, &c., part of which the Moabites afterwards took from them, Nu.32.3,37,38; De.3.12,16; Jos.13.15-21; 21.36,37; 1 Ch.6.78,79; with Is.15.2,4,6; 16.9; Je.48.21-24. Northward of the Reubenites the children of GAD had their inheritance in a soil more plain and fertile. Their principal cities were Dibon, Ataroth, Aroer, Jazer, Enon, Succoth, Penuel, Mahanaim, East Mizpeh, Ramoth-gilead, &c., part of which were afterwards seized by the Ammonites and Moabites, Nu.32.34-36; Jos.13.24-28; 21.38,39; 1 Ch.6.80,81; with Je.48.21-24; 49.2. Northward of the Gadites, in the large territory of Galilee of the Gentiles, were seated the Eastern MANASSITES. Their principal cities were Edrei, Ash-taroth, Golan, Geshur, Sharon, Jabesh-Gilead, Chor-azin, Bethsaida, Girsasha, Gadara, &c., Nu.32.39-42; Ex.3.14,16; Jos.13.29-31; 1 Ch.6.71; Mat.11.21; Lu.8.26. Nine tribes and a half had their portions on the west of Jordan. In the south parts, westward of the Dead Sea, JUDAH had a large inheritance of about a hundred fenced cities, among which were Libnah, Makkedah, Azekah, Engaddi, Adullam, Hebron, South Bethlehem, Beth-shemesh, Gath, Ekron, Ashdod, Askelon, and Gaza, which last five the Philistines long retained, Jos.xv.; 21.13-16; 2 Ch.11.5-10; Ne.11.25-30. The SIMEONITES had their portion out of the south-west part of the territory of Judah. Their chief cities were Beer-sheba, Hormah, Ziklag, &c., Jos.19.2-8. The BENJAMITES had a small strip along the north border of Judah: it included Jericho, Beth-el, Gibeon, Gibeah, Ramah, Gilgal, Mizpeh, Bahurim, Nob, Anathoth, Lod, Hadid, and Ono, and the northern half of Jerusalem, Jos.18.11-28; 21.17,18; Ne.11.31-35; 1 Ch.6.60; Ezr.2.33. The DANITES had their portion on the west of the Benjamites. Their chief cities were Zorah, Eshtaol, South Gath-rimmon, Aijalon, Ekron, Gibbethon, if not also Joppa, Jos.19.40-47; 21.23,24; 1 Ch.6.69. Along the north border of Benjamin and Dan the EPHRAIMITES had their portion. It abounded with pleasant hills—Ephraim, Gerizim, Ebal, Zalmon or Salmon, &c. The principal cities were Sharon, Lydda, two Beth-horons, Shechem, Samaria, Beth-el, Shiloh, Najoth, Gezer, &c. Northward of this was the portion of the Western MANASSITES. Their principal cities were Taanach, Beth-shean, Endor, Megiddo, Salem, Bezek, Thebez, North Gath-rimmon, Tirzah, Cesarea, Antipatris, Jos.xvi.xvii.; 21.21-25; 1 Ch.6.66-70; Ge.14.18; 1 Sa.11.8; Ju.9.47-50; 1.27; 1 Ki.16.8,9; Ac.9.35,36; 23.31,33. Along the north border of these Manassites was seated the tribe of ISSACHAR. Their chief cities were Kishon, North Jarmuth, Tabor, Nain, Jezreel, Aphek, &c. Here were the mounts Tabor, Gilboa, and North Carmel, and the famed valley of Jezreel, Jos.19.17-23; 21.28,29; 1 Ch.6.72,73; Lu.7.11; 1 Ki.21.1; 20.30; 18.20; Ju.4.6; 8.18; 1 Sa.31.1; Is.35.2; Ho.1.5. Along the north border of the men of Issachar the ZEBULUNITES had their portion, which, as well as the three preceding, extended all along from Jordan on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west, and contained the rivers Kishon and Belus, if not also part of Mount Tabor. The chief cities were Cinnereth or Tiberias, Cana of Galilee, Gennesaret, North Beth-lehem, &c., Jos.19.10-16; 21.34,35; Ju.1.30; Mat.14.34; Jn.6.1; 2.1. Northward of the Zebulunites, on the west side, were seated the tribe of ASHER, whose principal cities were Rehob, North Hebron or Abdon, Aphek, Beth-shemesh, Kanah, Accho or Ptolemais, Jos.19.24-31; 21.30,31; Ju.1.31; 1 Ch.6.74,75; Ac.21.7; and on the east side was the portion of the NAPHTALITES, whose principal cities were Hammath, Ramah, Hazor, Kedesh, Beth-shemesh, Kirjath-sepher, Capernaum, &c., Jos.19.32-38; 21.32; 1 Ch.6.76; Ju.1.33; Mat.11.23. This and the three next preceding portions lay mostly in Lower or Western Galilee.

In correspondence with the legal dispensation they were under, and that they might be standing emblems of the people of God in their imperfect state, the Hebrews were generally happy or miserable as they obeyed or disobeyed the divine Lord of their country. Neglect to extirpate the idolatrous Canaanites issued in their sudden and often repeated apostasy from God to the like abominations. This JEHOVAH punished with repeated and grievous oppressions by the Mesopotamians, the Moabites, the Canaanites, the Midianites, the Ammonites, and Philistines. But upon their repentance he delivered them by Othniel, Ehud, Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and Samuel, their judges, Ex.23.24,32,33; 34.12-17; Le.18.24-30; Nu.33.52-56; De.iv.-xiii.xxviii.-xxxii.; 7.2-5,16,25,26; 18.9-12; 20.16-18; Jos.23.4-16; 24.20; Ju.i.-xxi.; 1 Sa.i.-vii.; 2 Ki.17.7-23; Ne.9.26-31; Ps.106.34-46; 78.56-67; Eze.20.25-29; 16.15-34.

About A.M. 2909, or rather twenty or thirty years later, the Hebrews, wearied of their immediate subjection to God and his occasional deputy judges, desired to have a king like their heathen neighbours. Their sinful desire was granted; but it did not alter the tenor of their happiness and misery to their advantage. Under Saul, their first king, they were reduced to the very brink of ruin; but under David and Solomon, who succeeded him, their glory and happiness were advanced to the highest, correspondent to the blessings of Isaac, Jacob, and Moses. The whole of the Canaanites who remained among them were reduced to slavery; and all the nations, from the River of Egypt on the south-west to the Euphrates on the north-east, Philistines, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Syrians, were rendered their tributaries, Le.xxvi.; De.iv.-xii.xxviii.; 32.15-43; 1 Sa.8.11-18; 12.14,15,25; 16.1-13; 23.17; 24.20; 25.30; 26.25; 2 Sa.7.10-16; 1 Ch.17.9-14; Ge.27.28,29; xlix.; De.xxxiii.; Ps.xx.xxi. lx.lvi.; 89.3,4,19-29; lxxii.cxxxii.; 1 Sa.viii.-xxxi.; 2 Sa.i.-xxiv.; 1 Ch.x.-xxix.; 1 Ki.i.-x.; 2 Ch.i.-ix.; Ps.xviii.cxliv.; 78.67-72.

To punish the apostasy of Solomon and his subjects, God, before his death, began to chastise them, by means of Hadad the Edomite and of Rezon the Syrian. Immediately after it the ten tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, Simeon, Dan, Rueben, Gad, Issachar, Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali, in A.M. 3075, revolted from the royal family of David and formed a distinct kingdom of their own; which, under nineteen wicked sovereigns, of nine different families, continued 254 years. To prevent their travelling up to the solemn feasts at Jerusalem, Jeroboam, an Ephraimite, their first king, established among them the idolatrous worship of the golden calves. To these Omri and Ahab added other idolatrous abominations still more hateful. Notwithstanding the faithful warnings of Ahijah the Shilonite, and of the man of God from Judah, and of Jehu the son of Hanani, and of Micahiah, and of the wonder-working Elijah and Elisha, and of Jonah, Amos, Hosea, and other prophets in their respective ages, the ten tribes continued obstinate in their iniquity, particularly in worshipping the calves of Beth-el and Dan. The frequent murder of their kings, especially just before the ruin of their monarchy, and the civil wars attending it; their repeated wars with the kingdom of Judah, and especially the invasions of the Syrians and Assyrians, rendered them generally miserable. The craft of Jeroboam I.; the valour of Baasha; the miraculous victories of Ahab; the successful wars of Jehoash, Jeroboam II., and Pekah, quickly issued in the ruin of their families and the distress of their kingdom. Of the eleven contemporary kings of Judah, only Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Jotham were indisputably pious; and prosperity attended their reigns and that of Uzziah. Rehoboam's inconsistency and Joash's apostasy were punished by Egyptian and Syrian invasions. Under the wicked reigns of Jehoram, Ahaziah, and Ahaz, the nation was reduced to the very brink of destruction. Ignorance, ingratitude, contempt of God and his oracles and ordinances, breach of covenant with him, idolatry, devilish divinations, alliances with heathens around and dependence on them instead of God, pride, hypocrisy, scornful obstinacy in wickedness, neglect of relative duties, selfishness, hatred, bloodshed, luxury, lewdness, injustice, oppression, falsehood, deceit, envy, covetousness, and every similar form of iniquity, having long prevailed among all ranks in Israel and Judah, God, by the Assyrians, fearfully punished them. After Pul and Tiglath-pileser had distressed and weakened the kingdom of Israel, Shalmaneser quite destroyed it in A.M. 3283; and, with Esarhaddon, his grandson, about forty years after, carried off the poor remains of the ten tribes to Media and other eastern parts of their empire, whence few, if any of them, ever returned to Canaan. From A.M. 3290 to 3294 Sennacherib terribly ravaged the kingdom of Judah, and took most if not all their fenced cities, except Jerusalem. But when he had brought up his forces to attack that sacred capital, God, in answer to Hezekiah and Isaiah's prayers, by an angel cut off 185,000 of them in one night and delivered the city, Le.26.14-39; De.4.25-28; 28.15-68; 29.18-28; 30.18; 31.16-20; 32.15-30; Jos.23.13-16; 24.20; 1 Sa.12.25; 2 Sa.7.14-16; 1 Ch.17.13,14; Ps.89.30-51; 1 Ki.9.6-9; 11.9-13,26-39; 14.7-16; 16.2-4; 17.1; 18.41,45; 20.13,28,42; 19.17; 21.21-24,29; 22.15,17,28; 2 Ch.18.6,27; 2 Ki.1.6,16; 3.17,18; 2 Ch.20.15-17; Ps.83.1-18; 2 Ch.21.12-15; 24.20; 2 Ki.9.6-10; 10.30; 8.10-13; 13.17-19; 14.25; Ho.1.4,5; Am.7.9; ii.-ix.; Mi.i.-iii.; 4.11-13; vi.vii.; Ho.i.; 2.2-13; iv.-xiii.; Is.i.-x. xvii. xxii.-xxiv.; 1 Ki.xi.-xxii.; 2 Ki.i.-xix.; 2 Ch.x.-xxvii.cxxxii.; 2 Ki.17.7-23; Is.cxxvi.-cxxxix.

Though the Jews had been severely punished for their hypocrisy and lukewarmness in the reformation attempted by king Hezekiah, and notwithstanding the manifold warnings of Hosea, Isaiah, Micah, and other prophets, yet they ungratefully abused their deliverance from the Assyrians, and the unnumbered mercies of both church and state consequent thereto. A most shocking scene of idolatry, murder, witchcraft, and everything horrid opened under king Manasseh, about A.M. 3306; which, notwithstanding his own repentance, and the piety and zealous reformation of Josiah his grandson, issued in the ruin of the state. After Josiah's death in A.M. 3394 both kings and subjects abandoned themselves to the most enormous impieties, to contempt and forgetfulness of God, to hypocrisy in, or profane neglect or abuse of his worship, to carnal confidence in themselves or their heathen allies, to profane swearing and open violation of the Sabbath, to neglect of relative duties and want of natural affection, to hatred, murder, luxury, whoredom, perverting of judgment, falsehood, slander, and covetousness. To punish these and their other enormities, under Manasseh and Amon, the Lord gave them up into the hands, first of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and then of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon. He, in different invasions, wasted their country, carried captive their princes and people who escaped his sword, and in A.M. 3416 burned their cities and temple, and rendered their land a desolate wilderness. While Daniel and others, who were first carried prisoners to Babylon, were kindly and sometimes honourably used, those who came after were treated with much severity, contempt, and derision. Such of the poor as were left in Canaan and those who acceded to them, quickly after the murder of Gedaliah by Ishmael, retired to Egypt, where they mostly perished in a few years, when Nebuchadnezzar ravaged that country, Le. 18. 28, 29; 26. 14-39; De. 4. 25-28; 27. 14-26; 28. 15-68; 29. 18-28; 30. 17, 18; 31. 17-19; 32. 15-30; Jos. 23. 13-16; 24. 20; 1 Ki. 9. 6-9; 2 Ch. 7. 19-22; 34. 23-28; 2 Ki. 20. 17, 18; 21. 11-15; 22. 16-20; Mi. 4. 10, 11; ii. iii. vi. vii.; Hab. i. -iii. 16; Zep. i.; 2. 1-3; 3. 1-8; Ho. 6. 11; Am. 2. 4, 5; v. vi.; 9. 1-10; Is. i. -v.; 6. 9-12; 9. 13-21; xxiv.; 27. 10, 11; 28. 14-22; 30. 1-17; 42. 17-25; 58. 1-5; 59. 1-15; Eze. ii. -xxiv.; Je. i. -xliv. lii.; 2 Ki. xxiv. xxv.; 2 Ch. xxxvi.; La. i. -v.; Je. xxiv. xxix.; Da. i. -v.

When the Jews, who were first carried captive, had been just seventy years in Babylon, Cyrus the Persian, who had, about two years before, taken Babylon and abolished the power of the Chaldeans, by a solemn proclamation, A.M. 3468, commissioned them to return to their country and rebuild the temple of their God. To encourage them he restored the sacred vessels which Nebuchadnezzar had brought away; and ordered his lieutenants on the west of the Euphrates to assist them with materials and money. About 30,000 of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and perhaps 12,000 of the other tribes, immediately returned, under the direction of Zerubbabel and of Joshua the high-priest. Notwithstanding much opposition and trouble, in twenty years they rebuilt the temple and established the worship of God. About seventy years after, Ezra and Nehemiah, as deputies of the Persian king, reformed their corruptions and rebuilt the wall of Jerusalem. The Jews meanwhile astonishingly increased in numbers and enjoyed a tolerable degree of happiness. The Ammonites, Moabites, Samaritans, Philistines, Edomites, and Arabians indeed took every opportunity to harass them; and Haman the Amalekite, by a plot, brought them to the very brink of destruction. But God, by means of Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Mordecai, frustrated their attempts. Excepting that Artaxerxes Ochus, about 3653, ravaged their country and transported multitudes of them into Egypt or to the east of Media for slaves, the Persian kings generally favoured them. But neither their mercies nor judgments restrained them from wickedness. They indeed from this time abhorred idolatry, which they reckoned the chief cause of their Chaldean captivity; but indulged themselves in marriages with the heathens, in cruelty to their Hebrew wives, in contempt of God's ordinances and profanation of his Sabbaths, and the like, Ge. 17. 7, 8; Le. 26. 40-45; De. 4. 29-31; 30. 1-10; 32. 35-43; 1 Ki. 8. 46-50; Ne. 1. 8, 9; Ps. 68. 22; 69. 35, 36; Is. 1. 25, 27; 4. 2-6; 11. 11-16; 19. 24, 25; 24. 22, 23; xxv. -xxvii. xxxv.; 14. 1-3; 40. 1, 2, 9-11, 29-31; 41. 8-20; 42. 13-16; 43. 14-21; 44. 21-28; 45. 13, 17; 46. 12, 13; 48. 16-21; 49. 10-26; 51. 11-23; 52. 1-12; 59. 19-21; lx. lxvi.; Je. 3. 12-25; 12. 7-16; 23. 3-8; 24. 5-7; 29. 10-14; xxx. -xxxiii.; 50. 4-8, 19, 20, 28, 33, 34; 51. 6; Eze. 6. 8-10; 11. 15-20; 16. 60-63; 20. 34-38; 28. 24-26; 34. 13-31; 36. 24-38; xxxvii. xl. -xlviii.; Ho. 2. 14-23; 6. 2; 14. 1-8; Joel 3. 1, 2, 16-21; Am. 9. 11-15; Ob. 17-21; Mi. 2. 12, 13; 4.

While the Grecian armies, between A.M. 3672 and 3834, so often marched through the country of the Jews, which lay between Syria and Egypt, God protected them in a marvellous manner. About 3672 Alexander the Great marched against them to punish their assisting his obstinate opposers of Tyre. But the humble supplication of their high-priest entirely stifled his resentment and secured his favour. He offered large sacrifices to their God, and confirmed to them whatever privileges they had enjoyed under the Persian kings. Having built Alexandria in Egypt, he settled multitudes of Jews therein, and allowed them the same privileges as his Macedonian subjects. About 3684 Ptolemy Lagus, king of Egypt, to revenge the attachment of the Jews to Laomedon his rival, furiously ravaged their country and carried 100,000 of them prisoners to Egypt; but he there used them so kindly, even promoting them to places of power and trust, that many others followed them thither of their own accord. Seleucus Nicator of Syria, having built thirty-five, if not forty, new cities, sixteen of which he called Antioch, after his father; nine Seleucia, after himself; six Laodicea, after his mother; three Apamea and one Stratonice, after his wives; placed in them as many Jews as he could, and assigned them the same privileges as they had at Alexandria in Egypt. About 3720 Philadelphus, king of Egypt, at his own expense, ransomed all the Jews who were enslaved in his dominions and gave them their freedom. It is said that he, or Euergetes his son, procured a Greek translation of their laws for the use of his famous library. Ptolemy Philopater offered large thank-offerings at the temple of Jerusalem for the victory which he obtained over Antiochus the Great; but enraged that their priests or their God had hindered his access into the HOLY OF HOLIES, upon his return to Egypt he terribly oppressed the Jews there, depriving them of their privileges, and assembled multitudes of them in order to have them devoured by ravenous beasts. Instead of hurting the Jews, the animals furiously turned upon and devoured the heathen spectators. Provoked by his barbarity, the Jews of Canaan readily submitted to Antiochus the Great, who had invaded their country. He repaired their temple at his own expense; complimented them with 20,000 pieces of silver, 1400 measures of wheat, and 375 of salt, for its service; and confirmed to them all their privileges which had been granted by Alexander the Great. As Jerusalem was much depopulated, he exempted from tribute, for three years, such as would settle in it, and commanded all his subjects to let their Jewish slaves go free. But Scopas, the Egyptian general, quickly forced the Jews to return to the obedience of his master, and placed a garrison at Jerusalem. About A.M. 3828 Heliodore of Syria, by order of his master Seleucus, attempted to pillage the temple of Jerusalem, but an angel affrighted him from the undertaking; and soon after he was permitted to poison his master and thus hasten ruin upon himself, Joel 3. 16, 17; Ps. 68. 29, 30; Eze. 26. 20; 21. 27; Da. 9. 25; 11. 14, 16, 20; Zec. 2. 8; 9. 8; 8. 20.

Antiochus Epiphanes was scarcely fixed upon the Syro-Grecian throne when the Jews severely felt his madness and fury. Because Onias their high-priest refused to comply with some heathen abominations, he turned him out of his office, and sold it to Jason, his more complaisant brother, for 350 talents of silver. Disgusted with Jason, he quickly turned him out, and sold it to Menelaus, another brother, for 650 talents. When Antiochus was in Egypt, about A.M. 3834, the Jews, falsely informed of his death, made public demonstrations of their joy; and Jason attempted to recover the high-priesthood. Provoked by this, and detesting their peculiar manner of worship, Antiochus, in his return homeward, forced his way into Jerusalem, murdered 40,000 of the inhabitants, and sold as many more for slaves. He carried off 1800 talents of the sacred money, and a great part of the furniture of the temple, and made two of his most inhuman favourites governors of the country. About two years after, mad with rage that the Romans had frustrated his designs upon Egypt, he ordered his troops, in their return through Judea, to pillage the cities, murder such as were able for war, and sell the women and children for slaves. Upon the Sabbath, when the Jews superstitiously declined to fight, his troops entered Jerusalem, killed multitudes in cold blood, and carried off 10,000 prisoners. They erected a fort hard by the temple, whence they might sallies forth and murder such as dared to worship there. Not long after Antiochus dedicated the temple itself to Jupiter Olympius, a chief idol of the Greeks, and erected his statue upon the altar of burnt-offering. For 2300 mornings and evenings, or 1150 days, the daily sacrifice was entirely stopped, and the temple rendered a scene of idolatry, lewdness, and murder. Such Jews as refused to worship idols or eat swine's flesh were exposed to all the horrors of persecution, torture, and death. Eleazar and a widow, with her seven sons, were the most distinguished martyrs. Others, hazarding everything dear, instructed their neighbours, and warned them to avoid every sinful compliance. Mattathias, a priest, and his sons Judas, Jonathan, Simon, &c., commonly called MACCABEES, took arms, and with astonishing bravery and conduct defended their religion and liberties. After many lesser advantages, Judas, who succeeded his father in the command, gave Nicanor, the Syro-Grecian general, a terrible defeat, A.M. 3839; recovered the temple, repaired and purified it, and restored the worship of God; and repaired Jerusalem, which had been reduced to almost a ruinous heap. After he had, with a handful of troops, for some years proved a terrible scourge to the Syro-Grecians, Edomites, Arabs, and other heathens around, he was slain A.M. 3843, and Jonathan his brother succeeded him. He and Simon his brother, who succeeded him, with astonishing bravery and prudence continued to rectify the disorders of both church and state. Onias the high-priest, son of the above-mentioned, having settled in Egypt, where he afterwards built a temple for those of his nation according to the form of that at Jerusalem, these Maccabees officiated in Canaan both as high-priests and as civil governors; but were both at last treacherously murdered. About A.M. 3869 Hircanus succeeded Simon his father. He first procured a peace with the now weakened Syro-Grecians, and then revolted from their yoke, and rendered himself an independent sovereign of the Jews. He subdued the Edomites, and forced them to embrace the Jewish religion. He reduced the Samaritans, and demolished Shechem and Samaria, their capitals, and razed their temple on Mount Gerizim. Alexander Janneus, his son, after a short reign of Aristobulus, his brother, succeeded him in A.M. 3899. He reduced the Philistines, obliged them to embrace the Jewish religion, and burned Gaza, their capital, into a ruinous heap. He also reduced the Moabites, Ammonites, and part of the Arabians. Never since the days of Solomon had the dominion of the Jewish nation been so extensive. Never but under these three reigns were they, after the captivity, independent of the heathen powers—Persians, Greeks, or Romans, Da. 8. 9-14, 23-25. 9. 25; 11. 23-35; Zec. 14. 1-3; xiii.; 8. 8, 9; 12. 2-8.

By his cruelties and other misconduct Alexander had exceedingly disgusted many of his subjects, particularly the Pharisees. After his death in A.M. 3925 his widow, with no small prudence, governed the nation for nine years. She was scarcely in her grave when Aristobulus, her younger son, joined by multitudes of those who hated the Pharisees, contended for the crown and high-priesthood against Hircanus, his elder but indolent brother. Finding that the Arabs assisted Hircanus, he, in A.M. 3940, applied to the Romans for help. But they, turning his enemy under Pompey, quickly reduced the country. He and several of his captains pushed their way into the holy of holies. And soon after Crassus, another Roman, bent on his fatal Parthian expedition, pillaged the temple of about 10,000 talents of silver. After Judea had for thirty-two years been a continued scene of ravage and bloodshed, Herod, the son of Antipater, who had acted as a principal incendiary by the assistance of Antony the Roman triumvir, obtained the crown through much barbarity and murder. Finding that neither force nor flattery could render him, who was a Gentile—at least by his father—and who, to please Augustus the emperor, had made heathen compliances, quiet on his throne, he, in A.M. 3984, resolved to recommend himself by rebuilding their ruinous temple. Within three years and a half the principal parts were finished in a most magnificent form. It took eight years more for the rest. Nay, in A.M. 4033, it appears not to have been finished, Eze. 21.26,27; Hag. 2.6,7,22; Mi. 5.1,3; Zec. 14.1,2; Mal. 4.1; Jn. 2.20.

When the long-promised Messiah appeared in the flesh, A.M. 4000, the Jews, finding their carnal imaginations and expectations nowise answered in him, notwithstanding the clearest evidence in his doctrine, miracles, and behaviour, rejected and ignominiously crucified him, and did what they could to prevent the spread of his gospel among the Gentiles. To mark him actually come, the sceptre gradually departed from them. He had scarcely made his appearance in the temple, in the twelfth year of his age, when Judea was reduced into a Roman province. When he died, about twenty-four years after, they seem to have had no power of life and death in their hands. After the conversion of the centurion and his friends, A.C. x., we find not the least vestige of civil power among them independent of the Romans. The destruction of the Galileans at the temple by Pilate; the destruction of others by the falling tower of Siloam; the self-destruction of Judas the traitor; the alarming exit of Ananias and Sapphira; the consumption of Herod by worms; the blindness of Elymas the sorcerer; the murder of about 100,000 Jews in Egypt, Syria, and Canaan by their heathen neighbours,—were but foreboding earnest of the fearful miseries of that nation for the rejection of Jesus Christ. The appearance of pretended Messiahs—Simon, Dositheus, Theudas, Felix the Egyptian, and many others; the astonishing spread of the gospel through the Roman empire; and the persecution of Christians by Jews and heathens, and even by the edicts of Nero the emperor; the multitudes of earthquakes in Europe, Lesser Asia, &c.; the continued rumours of war, which disheartened many of the Jews from the cultivation of their fields; the hanging of a star, shaped like a sword, over Jerusalem for a whole year; the nocturnal blazing of a noontide light, about midnight, over the temple and places about, for half an hour, at the feast of tabernacles; a cow's bringing forth a lamb while she was led forward to the altar for sacrifice; the spontaneous opening of the east gate of the temple whilst shut with strong bolts, though twenty men could in general scarcely open it; the apparitions of armies in the air, fighting battles and besieging cities; the unaccountable and absolutely obstinate crying of a country fellow, called Jesus, in the city for more than seven years, especially at the solemn feasts, 'Woe to Jerusalem—Woe to the people—Woe to the temple;' and who, while at last he added, 'Woe to myself,' was struck dead on the spot; were providential omens thereof, Ps. 22.6-20; 35.11-26; 69.1-21; Pr. 1.20-32; Is. 8.14,15; 49.4,7; 50.2-9; 52.14; 53.1-8; 65.1,2,5,6; Da. 9.24; Zec. 11.8-13; Mat. ii.-xxviii.; Mar. i.-xv.; Lu. iv.-xxiii.; Jn. v.-xii. xviii. xix.; Ac. ii.-xxviii.; Ge. 49.10; Is. 66.6; Joel 2.30,31; Zec. 11.1; Mat. 24.3-13,24,30; Mar. 13.5-13,24-26; Lu. 21.7-17,25; Ac. ii.-xxix.; 1 Th. 2.14-16.

About A.D. 67 Cestius Gallus, the Roman governor of Syria, having invested Jerusalem, raised the siege without any visible reason and retired with the Jews at his heels. Taking this opportunity, the Christians, as directed by their Lord, left the city and retired to Pella beyond Jordan, where Providence protected them, Mat. 24.14-16; Mar. 13.14,15; Lu. 21.20,21. Not long after, Vespasian, whom God just then marvellously advanced to the Roman throne, in A.D. 69, invaded their country from the north-east, and quickly spread murder and flames all along to the south-west. Beginning at Galilee, where the inhabitants of Chorazin, Bethsaida, Nazareth, and Capernaum had been principal rejecters of Jesus Christ, he took the cities by force, burned them into heaps, and murdered almost every inhabitant. The Jews resisted with madness, and chose rather to murder themselves than surrender to the most compassionate generals. Nowhere was the scene more shocking than at Jerusalem, where the worship of God had been long profaned and our Lord had been crucified. The Romans invested the city, while the Jews, not only from Canaan, but from the countries around, were assembled to keep their passover, perhaps to the number of two or three millions. Thus their solemn feast which commemorated their miraculous deliverance from Egypt, and which prefigured Jesus' death, and at which he had been crucified, became their snare and trap. Split into three different factions, the besieged Jews spent their time in barbarously murdering one another, or united in desperate but unsuccessful sallies against the Romans. Some even in sport murdered their fellows, to try the sharpness of their swords. At last the faction headed by Eleazar was treacherously massacred; and while the heaps of unburied corpses occasioned a pestilence, their destruction of each other's magazines hastened a terrible famine. Even the most delicate ladies were obliged to broil their infants for food. Meanwhile the Jews scorned every gracious proposal which the compassionate Titus, now general for Vespasian his father, could make them. Having besieged the city about six months, the Romans, A.D. 70, forced their way into it from the east. Provoked with the obstinacy of the besieged, they murdered every one they met with. While the streets ran with blood, the air was filled with the groans of the dying, the howlings of the terrified, and the desperate outcries of the ravished; and the flames of the burning city ascended up to heaven. Instigated by a pretended Messiah, 6000 took refuge in the temple. Titus was extremely bent upon preserving it; but one of his soldiers, by casting a brand, set it on fire. Nor could all his authority make his loving and obedient troops so much as attempt to quench the flames. The outcries of the Jewish beholders became then absolutely infernal. Not long after its rival temple in Egypt, built by Onias, shared a similar fate. Jerusalem was turned into a ruinous heap. The foundations of the temple were ploughed up, probably in quest of treasure; and, for the like reason, much of the rubbish of the houses was turned up; and it is said, not only the bellies of the dead but of the living were ripped up for the sake of the gold which they were supposed to have swallowed. Besides 257,660 who perished in other places, 1,100,000 are said to have lost their lives at Jerusalem alone. Titus caused the ringleaders in the rebellion to be crucified all round the city, till no more wood for crosses could be had. About 97,000 were taken prisoners. Many of these were sent into Egypt by sea to be slaves. About 11,000 perished with hunger. Part were transported to Syria, to be devoured by wild beasts in the public diversions, or sold at the lowest rate for slaves. Not one descendant of David that could be found was left alive. Nevertheless multitudes of Jews still remained in the Roman empire. These, about A.D. 119, murdered about 500,000 of the Roman subjects, Christians and heathens. But Trajan, the valiant emperor, with no small difficulty and with terrible bloodshed, reduced them. About A.D. 134 Ælius Adrian, the emperor, prohibited them from circumcising their children, and appointed a colony of heathens to rebuild Jerusalem and name it Ælia, after himself. About 200,000 Jews, assembling under Barcochab, one of the banditti who had for a century before infested Canaan with their robberies, and now a pretended Messiah, murdered the Roman subjects wherever they could find them. With no small difficulty the Romans defeated them in battle. After a siege of three years they took Bitter their capital. Fifty other garrisons quickly surrendered. In this war about 600,000 Jews are said to have been slain by the sword, besides those who perished by fire, famine, or pestilence. For several years fairs were held in Syria for selling the prisoners; and of those who were transported to Egypt many perished by hunger, shipwreck, and massacres. Adrian built his city on Mount Calvary; and, in contempt of the Jews, erected a marble statue of a swine over its principal gate. For about 500 years after this they durst not, without bribing the soldiers or hazarding their lives, approach near the ruins of their once sacred capital.

Since this period the Jews have continued scattered among all nations, obstinately adhering to their ancient and distinguished ceremonies, in contempt of Christ; their numerous pretenders to Messiahship in every age and nation having hardened them in their delusions, and drawn upon them an infinity of mischiefs. Dreadful have been their persecutions by the kings of Persia, Roman emperors, Arabian caliphs, kings of Spain, France, England, and princes of Germany; and often from the groundless fury of the enraged populace in these places. A few instances shall represent their miserable condition. About the beginning of the fifth century of the Christian era the people of Macedonia, Dacia, Syria, and Minorca, murdered multitudes of them on account of their insulting their religion, and forced the remainder to hide themselves in dens and caves of the earth. In the sixth century, Julian, their pretended Messiah, and his followers drew upon themselves, by their insolence, the death of 20,000, and the enslavement of as many more. In the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, the Popish Crusaders murdered them almost wherever they could find them, while the Jews themselves murdered their own children, that the Crusaders might not cause them to be baptized. About the beginning of the thirteenth century Nasser the Arabian caliph, provoked by their madly running after pretended Messiahs, scarcely left one of them alive in Mesopotamia and the places around. After various confiscations of goods, banishments, and bloody massacres, they were finally expelled from England by King Edward, A.D. 1291, to the number of 160,000. Edward permitted them to transport their substance to France; but there, in his own dominions, he confiscated it for himself; so that most of them perished through want. After several banishments and massacres, they were, in 1300, finally expelled from France. About 1492 the Spaniards banished 600,000 or 800,000 of them. Most of these perished by shipwreck, or through the inhumanity of the Africans. Many of their carcasses lay unburied. Between A.D. 1663 and 1666 scarcely any of them were left alive in the Persian empire. To save their lives or wealth, many of them have, from age to age, pretended to embrace the Romish idolatry. Perhaps at present 16,000 or 20,000 of them are professed Papists in Portugal and Spain, and not a few of them in clerical orders. These their friends endeavour to have circumcised at death, Le. 26.14-39; De. 4.26-28; 28.49-68; 29.18-28; 30.17,18; 31.16-18,29; 32.15-34; Ps. 2.1-5,9; 21.8-12; 35.23,26; 40.14,15; 50.2,3; 69.22-23; 58.2-11; 59.11-15; 109.1-20; 110.5,6; 132.18; 140.9,10; 55.15,23; Pr. 1.24-32; Is. 2.6-21; 3.1-26; 4.1; 5.24-30; 6.9-12; 8.15,21,22; 9.13-21; 24.1-22; 27.10,11; 28.17-22; 10.22,23; 42.19,20,22-25; 59.1-18; 65.2-7,11-15; 66.3,4,6,7,14-18; Eze. 6.1-7; vii. ix. xv.; 16.35-39; Da. 9.26,27; Ho. 3.4; Am. 9.1-10; Zep. 1.13-18; Zec. 13.8; 14.1,2,4,5; Mal. 4.1,3,5,6; Mat. 3.12; 8.12; 12.43-45; 21.37-44; 22.6,7; 23.34-39; 24.1-41; 26.64; Mar. 12.1-9; 13.1-31; Lu. 11.49-51; 13.1-9,24-35; 17.22-37; 19.14,27,41-44; 20.16-18; 21.20-33; 23.29-31; Jn. 5.43; 7.34; 8.21,24; Ro. 11.8-25; 1 Th. 2.15,16; He. 2.3; 6.6-8; 10.26-31; 1 Pe. 4.17,18; 2 Pe. 2.9-22; 3.9-11; De. 4.27,28.

Notwithstanding their inexpressible miseries, the Jews, everywhere scattered, have, for 1700 years past, remained a people distinct from the rest of mankind, and never in the common manner incorporated with others. It is computed that their present number amounts to 3,000,000; 1,000,000 of which lives in the Turkish empire; 300,000 in Persia, India, and China; and 1,700,000 in Africa and Europe. Except in Portugal and Spain, their condition is now generally tolerable. It is even observable, that scarcely one of their distinguished oppressors, whether persons or nations, has long escaped the justice of Heaven. About A.D. 1866, or 1867, we expect the whole of the Hebrew tribes to be converted to the Christian faith, and to be happily and orderly replaced in Canaan, where it is probable they will continue to the end of the world. When they shall be just settled, the Turks and their allies, we expect, will attempt to dispossess them, and seize on their wealth; but shall miserably perish in the enterprise, Le. 26.40-45; De. 4.29-31; 30.1-10; 32.35-43; 1 Ki. 8.45-50; Ps. 68.22-30; 69.35,36; Is. 1.25-27; 4.2-6; 9.1-7; 11.11-16; 19.24,25; 24.22,23; 27.12,13; xxv. xxvi. xxxv.; 41.8-20; 42.9-16; 43.18-21; 44.23,26,27; 45.17; 46.12,13; 49.10-26; 51.11,17-23; 52.1-12; liv.; 55.8-13; 56.8; 57.13-19; 58.12; 59.19-21; lx.-lxvi.; Je. 3.18; 23.3,4,7,8; 30.3,8-11; 31.1,8,10,38-40; 32.36-44; 33.6-14; 50.4,5; Eze. 11.16-20; 16.60-63; 20.34-38; 28.24-26; 34.13-31; 36.24-38; xxxvii.-xlvi.; Da. 12.1; Ho. 1.11; 3.5; 2.14-23; 6.2; 14.1-8; Joel 3.1,2,16-21; Am. 9.11-15; Ob. 17-21; Mi. 2.12,13; 4.6,7,13; 5.5-15; 7.12-20; Zep. 3.9-20; Zec. 8.7,13; 10.6-12; 12.2-9; 14.1-11; Ro. 11.15,26-32; 2 Co. 3.16; Eze. xxxviii. xxix.

XIX. No history is more important than that of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH in her Head and members. This world was chiefly created for a theatre, on which JEHOVAH might transact the work and display the glories of our redemption. To prepare the way for this great work, God permitted mankind to fall in Adam their covenant-head. In prosecution of it he published the first promise in paradise; instituted sacrifices; and, by an effusion of his Spirit, made the descendants of Seth to distinguish themselves from those of Cain, and observe social and public assemblies for his worship. By an overflowing flood he swept off the multiplied offspring of the serpent, and testified that the grant of the earth to man, under the first covenant, was entirely annulled. Immediately after the flood he bestowed on Noah and his descendants a new grant of the earth, founded on that new covenant which cannot be broken by men's sin. When the seed of the serpent again waxed strong, and attempted to defeat his designs in their building of Babel, he dispersed them; but it was round about Canaan, where the Redeemer intended to appear in manhood, and from whence the glad tidings of redemption were to be published, Ge. i.-xi. To preserve religion in the recorrupted world, God separated Abraham and his seed for himself by a peculiar covenant relation, founded on, and emblematic of, the covenant of grace. For almost two thousand years he marvellously preserved that family out of which the Messiah was to spring, and continued the true religion among part of them, even under the oppression of the most powerful and active agents of hell. To them the covenant of grace was gradually manifested, and confirmed by many solemnities, signs, and types, Ge. xii.-l. &c.

Intending quickly to abandon the rest of mankind to the slavery of Satan, he, by the deliverance of his people from Egypt, further separated them for himself. To regulate and fix them in this state, he added a multitude of positive laws, which, whether ecclesiastical or civil, did almost all exhibit Jesus Christ and his work of redemption. The fate of that generation in the wilderness; the remarkable effusion of the Holy Ghost on their children; their unbloody victories over the natives, and safe settlement in Canaan; their mingled troubles, deliverances, and rests, under the Judges; and their glory and wealth under David and Solomon; were but so many figures of the approaching redemption by Jesus Christ. To mark their imperfection and their true design, the most purifying ceremonies, as the sin-offering, annual expiations, and water of separation, remarkably spread defilement. The Jewish nation, church, and ordinances had no sooner arrived at their meridian glory, than they began to fade, and make way for the exhibition of Christ himself. Whilst the captivity in Babylon weaned them from their obstinate attachment to idolatry, the loss of the diadem of David's family, of the magnificence of the temple, and of the Urim and Thummim, sacred fire, ark, Shekinah, and perhaps other principal types, taught them to look for the speedy manifestation of the things prefigured. The dispersion of the Jews through the Persian, Grecian, or Roman empires, with their sacred books along with them, prepared the nations, as by broken hints, for the spread of the gospel by means of the pentecostal converts, or of the preachers who followed them into their several countries. By the successive rise and fall of the Chaldean, Persian, and Grecian empires, God had shown that every alteration of external government did but change the form of men's sinfulness and misery, if not add thereto. After repeated attempts Satan had, in the constitution and extent of the Roman empire, erected the strongest battery against God and his Christ which had ever existed, and had reduced God's separated nation to the lowest depth of corruption and misery. And, that the appearance of Jesus might be the more observable, the miracles, once so common in Israel, had for 700 years almost entirely ceased; nor for 400 had one prophet appeared among them, Ex. iii. to Es. x. &c.

In the fulness of time, A.M. 4000, when the long-continued tribeship and legislative power were departing from the descendants of Judah; when that tribe had undergone manifold calamities and changes of government and masters; when Daniel's seventy weeks, or 490 years from the edict of Artaxerxes to rebuild Jerusalem, were just expiring; when the nations had been shaken by the rise of the Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, and by the fall of the two former; when the second temple yet stood, but hastened towards ruin; when the family of David remained distinct in genealogy, but was extremely debased; when both Jews and Gentiles generally expected the unparalleled birth of a glorious Redeemer; and when an uncommon peace, of about twelve years' continuance, extended over most, if not all the world; the eternal Son of God, without any change in his divine nature or person, assumed a real manhood; in respect of which he became the son of Eve, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Jesse, David, and Mary the Virgin; and was born at Bethlehem. Endowed in this manhood with an incomparable fulness of gifts and grace, and peculiarly supported in his work, his perfection in knowledge, in wisdom, holiness, meekness, and zeal, was amazing, Ge. 49.10; Eze. 21.27; Mi. 5.3,5; Da. 9.24; Hag. 2.6-9,21-23; Mal. 3.1; Nu. 24.17; Is. 7.14; 9.6; 28.16; 40.3,5,9,10; 48.17; 49.26; 45.17-25; Je. 23.5,6; 33.15,16; Ho. 1.7; Ps. 45.6; 97.7; He. 1.6; Pr. 8.22,23,30; Ps. 2.7; Zec. 13.7; Ex. 23.21; Ge. 3.15; 12.3; 22.18; 26.4; 28.14; 49.10; De. 18.18; Je. 30.21; Is. 11.1,10; Lu. 1.69; 2 Sa. 7.12,14; Ps. 72.1; 89.3,20; Eze. 34.23,24,29; 37.24,25; 17.22; Is. 53.2; 4.2; 7.14; Zec. 3.8; Da. 2.34,35; Je. 31.22; Mi. 5.2; Lu. 1.32,35; with Mat. i.; Lu. i. ii. 3.23-38; Ro. 1.4; 9.5; Jn. 1.14; Is. 49.1-3; 48.16,17; 11.2-4; 61.1-3; 50.4-7; 42.1-6; Ps. 89.19-21; 45.2,7; 2.6; 18.50; 28.8; 132.17; 1 Sa. 2.10; Da. 9.24; Is. 10.27; 49.8; 52.13; 53.7,9,11; 59.17; 63.5; Ps. 16.8; 18.28-36; 28.7; 40.7,8; 69.9; Pr. 8.14; Zec. 9.9; Je. 30.21; Mat. 3.15,17.

Having, as our Saviour, undertaken the great work of redeeming us from our sins, he, in the character of our High-priest, offering himself in the sacrifice of himself, appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh, the manner of his birth being extremely debased. Hatred, contempt, reproach, poverty, and trouble were his inseparable attendants in life. In his infancy Herod attempted to murder him. During his public ministry he wandered about without any fixed abode. While Satan repeatedly tempted him to the vilest of crimes, Jews, Samaritans, and others affronted and abused him. In ratifying the new covenant, and abolishing the ancient ceremonies by his death, his sorrows were quite inexpressible. While Judas, instigated by Satan, betrayed him, and Peter thrice denied him, the other disciples forsook him. Notwithstanding his manifest innocence, Jews and Gentiles of all ranks concurred to persecute and murder him. He was spit upon, buffeted, scourged, condemned, and crucified. Not only in the garden, but when his body was distorted on the cross, he seemed to be deserted, and loaded also with the sins of a lost world. While nothing but gall and wormwood were allowed to quench his thirst; while the soldiers in sport parted his garments, and the profligate multitude insulted him with scoffs; he, imploring forgiveness to his murderers, and committing his soul to God, expired, an atonement for sin. Yet notwithstanding repeated attempts, not a bone of him was broken. He was interred in the tomb of the rich, but sealed up and watched by the wicked. Upon the third day he conquered death, and rose again to receive his glorious reward. And after he had sufficiently manifested the reality of his resurrection, and instructed his disciples, he ascended into the sanctuary and holy of holies above, to make continual intercession for us, Je. 30.21; Ps. 40.6-8; Ex. xxviii. xxix.; Le. i.-v. viii. ix. xvi.; Nu. xix. xxviii. xxix.; Ps. 110.4; 22.1-21; 35.11-21; 40.1-15, 17; 41.5-9; 69.1-21, 29; 55.3-9; 109.2-4; 89.38-45; Is. 11.1; 49.7; 50.8; 25.8; 52.14; liii.; Mi. 5.1; Ho. 11.1; 12.14; 6.2; Da. 9.24, 25; Zec. 9.9; 13.7; 3.9; 12.10; Lu. 13.32, 33; 9.31; Mat. 12.40; 16.21; 17.9, 22, 23; 20.18, 19, 22, 28; 21.38, 39; 26.2, 21, 23, 24, 31, 32, 34; Jn. 1.29, 36; 2.19; 6.70, 71; 10.11, 18; 11.50; 12.24, 27, 31-33; 13.18, 21, 38; 15.13; 16.7, 10, 21, 22; 20.17; Ps. 16.9, 10; 110.1; Mat. ii.; 4.1-10; 8.20; 9.3, 11; 11.19; 12.24; xxvi. xxvii.; Lu. 11.15, 16; 15.1; 20.20; 22.23; Jn. 5.16; 6.60, 66; vii.-x.; 11.47, 48, 57; xviii.-xx.; Ac. 1.1-11; He. v.-ix.; 10.22.

In his debasement and glory he was, and is, equally the Saviour, Shepherd, Prophet, and Teacher of his church, whether Jews or Gentiles; feeding them, particularly the poor, by his truths, ordinances, influences, and blessings. His personal ministrations were chiefly confined to Judea, especially in the courts of the temple at Jerusalem, where multitudes attended; and in the regions of Galilee, where the grossest ignorance had long prevailed. He confirmed his precious, seasonable, practical, and sanctifying doctrines by miracles unnumbered, and which emblematically represented his spiritual work in the redemption of men. He feasted thousands on a few loaves, without diminishing the food. He healed the most incurable diseases; made the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, the dead to live, the devils to leave the possessed, the storms to become calm, the trees to wither, the fishes to assemble into nets, or even to bring the money which he needed. And yet his ministrations had but inconsiderable success in the conversion of sinners, Ge. 49.10, 18; Ps. 14.7; 53.7; 98.2, 3; Is. 19.20; 42.7; 45.17, 22; 46.13; 48.17; 49.6, 7, 25, 26; 59.20; 63.1-5; Je. 23.6; 33.16; Ho. 1.7; Zep. 3.17; Zec. 9.9, 11; Mat. 1.21; Lu. 1.31, 47; Ps. 23.1-3; Is. 40.11; 49.9, 10; 41.17, 18; Eze. 34.11-16, 22-29; 37.23-27; Mi. 5.4, 5; Zec. 13.7; 11.7, 11; Hag. 2.7, 9; Mal. 3.1-3; Is. 41.27; 9.1, 2; 52.7, 15; 40.3; De. 18.15-19; Ge. 49.10; Ps. 22.22; 40.9, 10; Pr. 1.20-24; viii.; 9.1-12; Job 33.23; Is. 11.9; 42.1, 3, 6, 7; 49.6; 50.4; 48.17; 54.13; 55.3-11; 59.19, 20; Lu. 1.79; 2.32; Mal. 4.2; Is. 29.18, 19; 35.5, 6; 41.17; Eze. 34.16; Is. 25.8; Ho. 13.14; Mat. iv.-xxv.; Mar. i.-xiii.; Lu. iv.-xxi.; Jn. ii.-xvi.; Ro. 15.8; He. 1.1; 2.3, 4; Ac. 10.33; Is. 49.4; 53.1; 6.9, 10; Jn. 12.37-40.

Amidst his lowest debasement he discovered his Royal Headship over his church. He taught in his own name. He appointed twelve, and afterwards seventy more, of his disciples to act as his deputies, heralds, and ambassadors in the work of the gospel. He at least twice expelled the merchants from the courts of the temple. He instituted baptism and his own supper for seals of his covenant. Being raised from the dead, he more abundantly exercised his kingly office in appointing extraordinary and ordinary officers in the church, and in qualifying them with the Holy Ghost. He issued forth his oracles, and appointed his gospel ordinances. And he extends his dominion in the world by increasing, ruling, and protecting his subjects, and by restraining and conquering his and their enemies, Ge. 49.10; Ps. 2.6; 21.3-6; 24.7-10; 8.1; 45.6, 7; 68.18-35; 89.19-37; xciii. xevi.-c.; 118.22; 22.27-31; 132.17, 18; lxxii. cx.; Ca. 1.4, 12; 3.6, 9, 11; 7.5; Is. 2.3, 4; 4.2; 9.6, 7; 11.3-5; 12.6; 24.15, 16, 23; xxv.; 32.1, 2; 35.2; 40.9-11; 42.1-4; 45.5-26; 52.13, 15; 53.11, 12; 55.4; 63.1-6; Je. 23.5, 6; 33.15, 16;

For almost 2000 years after the call of Abraham, and especially after the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, very few Gentile sinners had been converted, or even called to fellowship with God. But the promised Shiloh had scarcely appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh, when wise men from the East, two centuries, the Syro-Phœnician woman, and the Samaritans and Greeks, received him by faith. He had scarcely ascended to heaven when he poured down the Holy Ghost in a wonderful manner. Qualified by his influences, the apostles and others, beginning at Jerusalem, preached with amazing success, and confirmed their doctrine by miracles. Within about forty years Arabia, Egypt, Ethiopia, and Cyrene on the south and west; Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Armenia, and Persia on the east; Phenicia, Syria, Lesser Asia, Pontus, Thrace, Greece, Illyricum,¹ Italy, if not also France, Spain, and Britain on the north and west; had received the gospel; and multitudes had believed on Christ, and formed themselves into regular societies, under the apostles, evangelists, prophets, pastors, teachers, ruling elders, and deacons, whom he had appointed; and walked in holy fellowship with God and among themselves. Wretched ignorance, gross idolatry, vain superstition, savage barbarity, shocking lewdness, and other like abominations, were, by the power of the gospel, obliged to give place to spiritual knowledge, piety, and virtue in every form, Ge. 49.10; Is. 11.1, 10; 2.2; Mi. 4.1; Joel 2.28; Pr. 1.23; Is. 32.15, 16; 44.3-5; Mat. 10.23; 28.20; Jn. 14.17, 18, 26; 15.26, 27; 16.7-14; 20.22; Lu. 24.49; Ac. 1.8; Ps. 72.6; Ho. 14.5; Eze. 34.26; Ps. 65.9-13; 68.9, 10; Is. 55.10-13; Joel 3.18, 21; Zec. 13.1; 14.8; Eze. 47.1-12; Is. 61.3, 11, 25, 3, 5-7; 41.17-19; 43.19; 12.3; Jn. 7.38, 39; Mar. 16.17, 18; Is. 35.3, 5, 6; 42.18; 29.18; Jn. 18.12; Am. 9.11; Ps. 69.34-36; 45.16; 68.22-28; 72.16, 17; Is. lxi.; 32.20; 60.20; Mat. 19.28; 5.13, 14; Ps. 132.16; Eze. 44.17-25; Ge. 3.15; 12.2, 3; 22.18; 26.4; 28.14; 49.10; De. 32.36, 43; Ps. 2.8; 14.7; 18.43; 22.27-31; 45.3-6, 9-17; xlvii.; 65.5; 66.1-4; lxxvii.; 68.22-35; 69.33-36; lxxii. lxxxvii.; 89.2-4, 18-29; xcii. xcvi.-c. cx.; 132.13-18; cxlix.; Is. 1.25-28; 2.2-5, 17-21; 4.2-6; 9.7; xi. xii.; 18.7; 19.18-25; xxv. xxvii.; 27.1-6, 12, 13; 29.18-30; 18.26; 32.1-4, 15-20; xxxv.; 41.10-20; 42.1-16; 44.2-5; 45.22-25; 49.6-26; 52.15; 53.10-12; liv. iv.; 56.8; 57.14-19; 59.16-21; lx.-lxxii.; 63.1-5; 65.16-25; 66.8-14, 18-24; Je. xxxi. xxxii.; Eze. 17.22-24; 34.11-31; 36.21-38; xxxvii. xl.-xlviii.; Da. 2.35, 44; 7.14; Ho. 1.10, 11; 2.14-23; xiv.; Joel 2.28-31; 3.16-21; Am. 9.11-15; Mi. iv. v.; 7.14-20; Zep. 3.9-20; Hag. 2.6-9; Zec. 2.10-13; 8.20-23; 14.8-11; Mal. 1.11; 4.2; Mat. 8.11; 16.18; 20.6-16; 13.3-52; 21.28, 29, 41, 43; 22.9, 10; 26.13; 24.14; 28.18-20; Mar. 16.15, 16; Lu. 2.32; 14.23; 24.47; Jn. 1.9; 3.16, 17; 8.12; 10.16; 11.52; 12.23, 24, 32; 16.8; Ac. 1.8; ii.-xix.; Ro. 1.7, 8; 11.11; 15.8-19; 1 Co. 1.2; 2 Co. 1.1; 8.1; Ga. 2.2; Ep. 1.1; Phi. 1.1; Col. 1.1; 2.1; 4.13; 1 Th. 1.1; 1 Pe. 1.1; Re. 1.11.

During this period the Christians, and especially their teachers, were hated and persecuted by the Jews and the heathen mob. But till their religion had spread and taken deep root among the Gentiles, they experienced no imperial persecution. God even made the junction of so many nations into one Roman empire, which Satan had erected as his impregnable bulwark against the approaching Messiah, a mean of its more easy spread. The destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, which soon after took place, were also calculated to wean men from the typical ceremonies, and to make them examine the character and religion of Jesus, who had so circumstantially predicted these events. From A.D. 66 to 312 the church was repeatedly under general persecutions, appointed by the Roman emperors, particularly under Nero, about 66; Domitian, 96; Trajan, 107; Adrian, 120; Aurelius, 160; Severus, 202; Maximin, 235; Decius, 250; Valerian, 257; Aurelian, 272; and Diocletian, 303. These persecutions were very useful to prevent the church's swarming with errors, or the propagators of them; for many, particularly the Gnostics, fond of mingling the heathen philosophy with the gospel of Christ, formed abominable tenets, in opposition to his person and grace. The monstrous Nero led the way in imperial persecution. Having, for his revenge or his diversion, burned part of Rome, his capital, he charged it to the Christians' account. Multitudes of them were burned in heaps in his gardens, for his nocturnal recreation; and in many corners of his vast empire they were inhumanly exposed to wild beasts, or otherwise tortured and slain. For about 250 years after, scarcely a disaster by sword, famine, or pestilence, came upon the Roman subjects, but the heathens, and especially their priests, pretended that the toleration of the Christians in their peculiar religion had provoked the gods to inflict it, and begged to have them utterly extirpated. The persecutions above-mentioned were all of them remarkably distressing. Those of Aurelius and Severus were extremely ruinous. Those under Maximin, Decius, and Valerian were still more furious and cruel. Millions of Christians were murdered without or by form of law. Multitudes were, for the public diversions, torn to pieces by lions, tigers, and other ravenous beasts, in the theatres. And the last, between A.D. 302 and 312, was still more terrible and bloody. Almost in every place of the Roman empire Christians, and especially their preachers, were scourged to death; had their flesh pulled off them by pincers, or mangled with broken pots; or they were torn asunder by beasts, or between trees; or were roasted between gentle fires; or, by holes made in their flesh, had melted lead poured into their bowels. In Egypt alone 144,000 are said to have been cut off by violent deaths, and 700,000 more banished. Their churches were everywhere demolished; and their books, especially the Scriptures, sought out and burned.

Scarcely any, whether the Jewish nation or particular persons, as Herod, Domitian, &c., who had persecuted the Christians, long escaped the justice of God. Terrible ravages by the Goths, Persians, and others, had often punished the Roman empire. But never was the justice of Heaven so manifest as in the case of Diocletian and his assistants. He and Heraclius his partner had scarcely begun their barbarous work when Galerius, their instigator, caused them to resign their authority and retire to a private life. After living some years in great anxiety, it is said that Diocletian poisoned himself. After several efforts to resume his imperial authority, Heraclius had his neck broken for attempting to murder Constantine his son-in-law. Maxentius and his army of about 200,000 were most of them slain by the enemy, or drowned in the Tiber, where they had laid snares for Constantine. Galerius died of a most tormenting and loathsome distemper, begging the prayers of the Christians as a mean of his relief. Constantine, son to Constantinus, the only Cæsar who had not joined in the persecutions, being called from Britain, was made emperor by his troops. He proclaimed a toleration of the Christian religion in the whole Roman empire; but Maximin his colleague in the east quickly revoked it, and attacked Constantine's forces, which were commanded by Licinus his brother-in-law. But being shamefully routed, he in a fury murdered multitudes of the heathen priests, who had instigated him to the war. When he was ready to give a second battle to Licinus, he was struck with blindness and terrible torments in both body and mind. In rage and despair he poisoned himself, confessing that he was plagued by Jesus Christ for his persecution of the Christians. Licinus, who was now deputy emperor in the east, for a time pretended to favour the Christians; but, instigated by the heathen priests, he at last commenced a furious persecution. In three great battles, in the last of which about 100,000 were slain and himself taken prisoner, Constantine reduced him, after which he was put to death, Ge. 3.15; Da. 11.30-35; Re. 6.3-12; Jn. 15.20; 16.2,33; 21.18,19; Ac. 14.22; 2 Ti. 2.11; 3.12; Mat. 16.24; 10.17-22,34-39; 22.6, 24.9,10,18; Lu. 12.49-53; 21.12-17; Re. 2.10; 3.10; 1 Co. 11.19; 2 Pe. 2.1-3; Mat. 24.5,11,24; Ac. 20.29,30; 1 Ti. 4.1-3; 2 Ti. 3.1-6,13; 4.3,4; Ge. 3.15; Re. 6.12-17; 12.2-4,7; De. 32.36-43; Ps. 2.1-6,9,12; 21.8-12; 68.14,21,23,30; xciii. xvi. -xcix.; 110.5,7; 89.23; 18.37-42; 35.5,6,26; 132.18; Is. 8.9,10; 9.4; 42.13,14; 49.24-26; 51.22,23; 54.15,17; 41.11; 45.24; 63.1-6; 66.15,16; Re. 1.7.

From A.D. 320 to 606 all the emperors except Julian professed themselves Christians. Constantine, and Theodosius in the fourth, and Justin I. and Justinian in the beginning of the sixth centuries of the Christian era, distinguished themselves by their care for the church. Constantine first of all made the Christian the established religion of the empire. He admitted few but Christians to places of power or trust; and while he erected churches and schools, and appointed salaries for their teachers, he warmly inculcated and carefully exemplified the due observation of the Lord's day. At first he tried soft methods for converting the heathens; but finding them obstinate, he began to pull down their temples, break in pieces their idols, and banish or even put to death their enraged priests. By the free preaching of the gospel, and by the spread thereof among the Indians, Persians, and those on the east of the Euxine Sea, many were turned to the Lord. But Constantine's excessive kindness to the doctors of the Christian church, and to their new converts, tempted them to ambition and dissimulation. Many, awed by his authority or example, or attracted by the favours they expected, professed themselves Christians, who had neither knowledge of, nor due regard to, Jesus or his truths. By his assumption of a kind of headship over the church, at least in some instances, the clergy were encouraged to model her government according to the form of that established in the empire. The favours of Theodosius, Justin, and Justinian were perverted to much the same purpose. While the inundations of the ravaging Goths, Huns, &c., were almost ruining both church and state, the Donatists in Africa, who separated from their fellow-Christians as not sufficiently pure in their practice; the Arians and half-Arians, through most of the empire, who denied our Saviour's proper divinity; the Pelagians, who denied the necessity of his righteousness for our justification, and of his Spirit's influence to regenerate the heart; the Nestorians, who were thought to hold a twofold person in Christ; and the Eutychians, who allowed him but one compounded nature, and other corruptors of the truth,—were fearful plagues to the church, by their soul-ruining errors, and by the furious contentions, rival councils, and even persecutions and massacres which they produced. The Arians, who in the fourth century held about thirty-two councils, and had often persecuting kings or emperors to abet them, were peculiarly hurtful, and had once forced most of the clergy to their side. But the doctrines of Pelagius, especially when a little refined, gradually and more insensibly infected most of the Christian church, both ministers and people.

By such means the church became a motley mass of practical heathens, mingled with a few real and circumspect Christians. The great zeal of the fashionable clergy was to render her in her offices, superior and subordinate, similar to the imperial state; and, for the gratification of their carnal proselytes, to borrow whatever they could find from the Jewish or heathen superstitions. Even in the fourth century lordly bishops, metropolitans, archdeacons, subdeacons, exorcists, and canonical singers were introduced. Candles were lighted by day in the churches. Incense was burned while prayers were offered or sacraments administered. On the stated fasts some particular meats were forborne. Abstinence from marriage was esteemed a high degree of sanctity, especially among the clergy. Prayers were directed to saints departed. Pretended relics were held in great veneration. Images of saints, and of Jesus Christ, were placed in churches, and sometimes were worshipped. The clergy began to officiate in canonical robes, which they held to be sacred. Prayers were made for the dead, and even sometimes for mitigation of torments to the damned. Baptism was held of absolute necessity to salvation, and hence was administered to the dead, or by lay persons. Pilgrimages to our Saviour's sepulchre, and a monkish retirement from fellowship with mankind, were reckoned a transcendent devotion. By the end of the sixth century the doctrines of the church were deeply infected with Pelagianism. The discipline had been long remiss, corrupt, or partial, chiefly in favour of the liberal or the great; and the principal concern of the leading clergy was who should be greatest. The notion of a purgatory or middle state; multitudes of sacred festivals and litanies, in honour of angels, the Virgin Mary, and martyrs; and consecrations of churches, were introduced. Everything supposed to have had connection with martyrs was held in veneration. But not contented with all these human or rather devilish inventions in the worship of God, Gregory the Great, a sainted and famous Bishop of Rome, added his new canons of the mass; his canticles and antiphones; and his almost innumerable ordinances concerning stations, litanies, processions, Lent, oblations for the dead, pontifical robes, consecrations, and relics, Mat. 24.5,11,24; Ac. 20.29,30; 1 Co. 11.19; 1 Ti. 4.1-3; 2 Ti. 3.1-6,13; 4.3,4; 2 Pe. 2.1-3; Re. vii. viii.; 12.8-17.

In the beginning of the seventh century two principal enemies to Jesus Christ formally appeared on the earth—the Mahometan delusion in the East, which has ever since extirpated or oppressed the Christian religion in a great part of the world; and the long-predicted Papery in the west. The imperial seat had been long before removed to Constantinople. The western empire had been abolished, and ten motley kingdoms formed out of its ruins. Every shadow of Rome's ancient forms of government by kings, consuls, decemvirs, tribunes, dictators, emperors, heathen or Christian, was gone; and Rome itself, in A.D. 566, subjected to the Exarch of Ravenna. These things had given the bishops of Rome an opportunity to extend their ambitious views. The clerical form of church government still wanted an imperial LORD OVER ALL instead of Jesus Christ; and by promoting divisions, by encouraging appeals to themselves from the eastern and other bishops, by pretending deeds of councils in their own favour, and by unwearied struggles with the bishops of Constantinople, the Romish bishops had long and earnestly contended for the supremacy. About A.D. 606 or 608 Phocas, an absolute monster of treachery, cruelty, and everything horrid, had, by the inhuman murder of his worthy master Mauritius and family, become the emperor of the East. It seems the Bishop of Constantinople disdained the friendship of this infernal wretch. But Boniface III. of Rome, by his fulsome flatteries, obtained his imperial appointment to be the UNIVERSAL BISHOP of the Christian church. Deputies were immediately despatched throughout the western churches to introduce the new Gregorian superstition and to procure a formal submission to the Roman pope. The missionaries being extremely ignorant of everything important, or at least incapable of officiating in the language of the places to which they were sent, it is said that Pope Vitalian, about A.D. 666, appointed their public worship to be everywhere performed in the now long disused Latin tongue. This at once concealed the ignorance of his missionaries, and became a standing badge of the church's subjection to Rome. Just five prophetic months, or 150 years after the pope had obtained his spiritual supremacy, and 666 years after John had received his Revelations in Patmos, Pope Stephen III., assisted by Pepin, king of France, who, by the help of a former pope, had treacherously usurped his master's throne, rendered himself a CIVIL LORD of the states of Rome, Ravenna, and Pentapolis; in consequence of which his cardinals or privy counsellors dressed themselves in purple and scarlet. Several of the succeeding popes claimed an absolute power to dispose of not only the Christian kingdoms and empires, but even of what belonged to heathens, everywhere in the world. By deceiving or terrifying princes with their excommunications and interdicts, by decoying or forcing them to the holy war in Canaan, and by raising up traitors against them, they caused them to submit to their slavery. The ten kingdoms which had been formed out of the ruins of the western empire all submitted to the idolatry, superstition, and clerical tyranny of Rome. The haughty pontiffs even pretended to command the angels, whether good or bad, to do what they pleased,—nay, they claimed an authority over JEHOVAH himself, in empowering their priests to create or divide the glorified body of his Son at their pleasure; in adding to his standard of faith and practice apocryphal tracts, human traditions, and decrees of popes or their councils; in founding the authority of his oracles on the will of their church, and, contrary to his express command, debarring all but their clergy from the free perusal of them; in altering, reversing, or confirming his laws as they pleased; in making multitudes of persons and things his partners in worship, and in protection of the world; in appointing multitudes of holidays in opposition to his law; and by pardoning men's sin or indulging them in it, and cancelling the obligations of oaths, &c. Most dreadful were the scenes of wickedness against God and man which prevailed in the whole antichristian body, but especially among their clergy. These, regular and secular, multiplied like locusts, till, by their delusions and oppressive exactions, they everywhere destroyed the souls of the people, enslaved their bodies, and ruined their estates. Under the different denominations of Augustinians, Benedictines, Franciscans, Dominicans, Carmelites, Jesuits, &c., huge armies of monks zealously supported the Romish bishop and his abominations. In the Benedictine Order alone, before the Reformation, it is said there had been above 15,000 monasteries, 24 popes, 200 cardinals, 1600 archbishops, 4000 bishops, 15,700 abbots who had been authors, and 156,000 deified saints. While the pope and his clergy wallowed in every fleshly abomination, and everywhere spread the most pernicious errors, gross idolatry, and superstition, by pretences to uncommon sanctity, and by magical wonders and pretended visions, they made their ignorant votaries believe what they pleased. By inhumanly excluding from trade, or even from their habitations, such as dissented from them; and by murderous inquisitions, massacres, and wars, in which millions of Waldenses and Protestants were slain, they terrified others into a blind submission, Da. 7.8, 20-25; 11.36-39; 2 Th. 2.3-12; 1 Ti. 4.1-3; 2 Ti. 3.1-7, 13; 4.3, 4; Re. 9.1-11; 11.2; xiii.; 17.1-14, 17, 18; 18.12, 13.

Notwithstanding the diabolical fraud and barbarous rage of these antichristian locusts and their abettors, Jesus Christ has always qualified and encouraged a proper number to bear witness for his injured doctrines and laws against the contrary abominations,—among whom may be reckoned the council of Charles the Great of France at Frankfort, in the eighth century; Claude, bishop of Turin, and his followers, in Piedmont, in the ninth and tenth; the WALDENSES in the south of France, in the twelfth and subsequent centuries, who, by war and persecution, were scattered into Germany, Italy, and Britain, and of whom Wickliffe and his followers in England, in the fourteenth century, and Huss and his followers in Germany, in the fifteenth, were the genuine offspring. Notwithstanding their faithful contentings, and notwithstanding dreadful judgments inflicted by Saracens, Turks, &c., the Antichristians still prevailed. The oracles of God were almost wholly unknown. Many of the bishops had never perused, and perhaps never seen them.

Doctrines were tried by false miracles and lying wonders, not by the Word of God. Many of the leading truths of the gospel were buried in oblivion, and the contrary errors established and believed. Even the remains of truth were rendered almost unintelligible by scholastic terms and arguments. Religion lay buried under wicked and senseless traditions and papal decrees. Worship was drowned in depths of heathenish, Jewish, or magical superstitions. Devotion chiefly consisted in adoring the sacramental bread, the Virgin Mary, saints, angels, images, and relics. Pardons of sin, or indulgences therein; admissions to ecclesiastical offices, or even to celestial thrones, were sold for money; and none but the poor, who could pay nothing, were consigned to eternal damnation. In ignorance many of the clergy were similar to brutes; but in pride, avarice, oppression, lewdness, blasphemy, and everything abominable, they were complete infernals. Meanwhile God—by making the holy war a means of introducing knowledge from the East—by forcing the learned Greeks into the papal dominions, through the capture of Constantinople by the Turks—and by causing the contentions between rival popes, and the struggles of the councils of Basil and Pisa, to sink the credit of the pontiffs among their votaries—prepared the way for the Protestant Reformation.

In A.D. 1517 Zuinglius in Switzerland, and Luther in Germany, shocked with the blasphemous manner in which the papal pardons of and indulgences in sin were exposed to sale, openly declared their detestation of them. By a diligent search of the Scriptures in defence of their conduct, their views of divine truth were exceedingly enlarged; and what they apprehended themselves they boldly preached to others, and warned them of their danger in a continued adherence to Rome. Wearied of the tyranny, and detesting the monstrous wickedness of the Romish clergy, multitudes embraced their doctrines, and attempted to search the Scriptures for themselves; for which purpose the learned reformers supplied them everywhere with translations in their mother tongue. Notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the popish rulers in both church and state, by pretended miracles and apparitions; by perfidy and flattery; by prohibitions of Protestant books; by wars, persecutions, and massacres;—and notwithstanding the lukewarmness, scandals, contentions, and even enthusiastic madness and horrible blasphemy, which took place among too many of the nominal Protestants, the true scriptural religion was, in less than fifty years, not only preached with remarkable success, but formally established by the civil authority, in a great part of Germany, in Sweden, in Denmark, in Holland, and half of Switzerland, and in Britain; and was, by public edicts, allowed in France, Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania. Since that period the Protestant religion has been almost entirely rooted out of Hungary, Austria, Bohemia, France, Palatinate on the Rhine, &c.; and the Papists have greatly increased in several of the Protestant dominions. It is doubtless true, however, that the number of Protestants in Europe has increased, notwithstanding all opposition. On several occasions, as in Germany 1418 and 1550, and in Britain 1558 and 1688, the opposers of Antichrist have been remarkably delivered, after they had for three years and a half appeared on the very brink of destruction. But the great slaughter of Christ's witnesses, by the apostatizing of Protestants to the essentials of Popery, and by the persecution of such as shall continue faithful, and their glorious resurrection, we suppose, are still future, Re. 11.2-10; 14.1-23; 17.14-17.

Partial effusions of the vials of God's wrath upon the Antichristians have also taken place. The Saracens not only murdered their eastern brethren in error, idolatry, and superstition; but, about A.D. 718, conquered Spain, and afterwards ravaged France and a part of Italy; seized upon Sicily and Naples; and thought it highly meritorious to harass and murder the Romish idolaters. From A.D. 830 to 980 the contentions between the descendants of Charles the Great, and the invasions of the Hungarians, deluged Germany, France, and Italy with torrents of human blood. From A.D. 1090 to 1290 millions perished in the pretended holy war with the infidel Saracens and Seljukian Turks for the recovery of Canaan. Scarcely a kingdom in Europe but was disordered in its constitution, drained of men, and beggared of wealth by these mad attempts, which the popes promoted with all their fury and craft, that they might have an opportunity to extend their power in Europe while the princes of the respective nations warred in the East. From A.D. 1200 to 1370 the furious wars between the papal and imperial factions, commonly called GUELFs and GIBELINS, rendered Germany and Italy a comparative desert. Between A.D. 1370 and 1447, or later, the frequent contentions of rival popes, and the brave resistance of the faithful Bohemians, involved the antichristian dominions in terrible misery and bloodshed. Between A.D. 1486 and 1534 a sweating sickness and other pestilential disorders cut off multitudes in England, Germany, and France. Between 1370 and 1698 the Ottoman Turks made the most shocking havoc among the Papists who inhabited Hungary, Poland, Dalmatia, the Mediterranean isles, and even part of Italy and Germany. But none of these plagues in the least reformed the pope or his votaries. When, between A.D. 1517 and 1570, about the half of his subjects revolted and embraced the Protestant religion, shame obliged their neighbours to drop several of their papal customs that were absolutely stupid or horribly wicked; but the whole substance of their errors and corruptions, a little varnished, was judicially established by the Council of Trent, which was concluded A.D. 1563. Modern history is generally considered to begin with the discovery of America, and there are three inventions which belong to the Middle Ages, but were not put into general use till the beginning of Modern Times, which have had much to do with the great progress made by the human race in the last four hundred years. These are the magnetic needle, gunpowder, and the printing press. Gunpowder is said to come from the Chinese, but it was not used in Europe until the fourteenth century. These and all other discoveries and inventions which have come into use in modern times, have lent themselves as servants to aid Christianity in changing the face of the earth, and the character and direction of the human race, so we may get a glimpse of the coming time now, when Christianity, as the truth, the way, and the life, will be dominant in the whole earth.

The antichristian and Mahometan delusions being extirpated from the face of the earth, the gospel will, we expect, with amazing rapidity and success, spread through the whole habitable world. Both Jews and Gentiles shall heartily embrace it, and turn to the Lord with one consent, and unite in his body the church. Then shall her doctrine, worship, discipline, and government be restored to the apostolic plan, and exactly correspond with the measuring-line and reed of God's Word. Astonishing shall be the abilities, labours, and success of her pastors and other officers; and amazing the knowledge, holiness, zeal, order, unanimity, and peace of her members. Such shall be their multitude and quality, as if all the ancient martyrs had risen from their graves to enjoy the most glorious fellowship with Christ. So general shall be the reformation of mankind, that perhaps few will remain apparently wicked: and long, with increasing growth, shall this happy period continue, Ge. 3.15; 12.2, 3; 22.18; 26.4; 28.14; 49.10; De. 32.36-43; Ps. 2.8; 14.7; 18.43; 22.27-31; 45.3-6, 9-17; xlvii.; 65.5; 66.1-4; lxxvii.; 68.22-35; 69.33-36; lxxii. lxxxvii.; 89.2, 3, 18-29; xciii.; xcvi.-c.; ex.; 132.13-18; cxlix.; Is. 1.25-28; 2.2-5, 17-21; 4.2-6; 9.8; xi. xii.; 18.7; 19.18-25; 24.23; xxv. xxvi.; 27.1-6, 12, 13; 29.18-24; 30.18-26, 29; 32.1-4, 15-20; xxxv.; 41.10-20; 42.1-16; 44.2-5; 45.22-25; 49.6-26; 52.15; 53.10-12; liv. lv.; 56.8; 57.14-19; 59.16-21; lx.-lxii.; 63.1-5; 65.16-25; 66.8-14, 18-24; Je. xxxi. xxxiii.; Eze. 17.22-24; 34.11-31; xxxvi.-xlvi.; Da. 2.35, 44; 7.14, 22, 27; 2.12; Ho. 1.10, 11; 2.14-23; 3.5; 6.2; xiv.; Joel 2.28-32; 3.16-21; Am. 9.11-15; Mi. 4.5; 7.14-20; Zep. 3.9-20; Hag. 2.6-9; Zec. 2.10-13; 8.20-23; 14.8-11, 20, 21; Mal. 4.2; Ro. 11.12, 15, 25-32; Re. vii.; 11.11-19; 15.2-4; 19.1-9; 20.1-5; xxi.; 22.1-6.

There seems to be forces at work in our day which indicate that truly the time is soon to come when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Men are being brought together as in one neighborhood. Already great enterprises are being contemplated which look to the speedy removal of whatever remaining obstacles there are to world-wide companionship among men. A railroad is already built from Joppa to Jerusalem, and from Damascus to Beyrout. There is talk of building a bridge across the Straits of Dover near Folkstone. The Mombasa and Nyanza Railway in Africa is to connect with the interior lakes and the coast. Among the possibilities of the near future is a railroad across Siberia from St. Petersburg to Behring Strait, and also one across Alaska to Behring Strait, while Behring Strait itself is to be bridged or ferried. A ship canal around Niagara Falls is contemplated, and also, it is said, a railroad from Quebec to Belle Isle in Labrador, with connecting ocean steamship lines to Midford, in Wales. When all the projected enterprises which look to completer union and fellowship among men are completed, there will not any longer be foreigners, but all men will be neighbors. Humanity will be then organized, all the scattered members of races and once isolated tribes will be brought into one body; the best ideas, the best science, the best religion, the best morals will then have the same opportunities of triumph everywhere, throughout the whole body of humanity, as they have had hitherto opportunities of triumphing among the more favored races. There is to be in the good coming time one science, one moral law, and one religion. This unity of the human race, too, is coming about day by day through the ordinary operation of law and truth. The kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation, but slowly and gradually it is permeating and gathering to itself all peoples and tongues. Our Lord said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." Through the truth as it is in Christ and through the power of the Holy Spirit the race is gradually being reorganized, and in the ages to come is to be not ideally only but really the body of Christ.

| 1 | 4004 | | | God created all things; covenanted with mankind; Adam fell into sin, and his posterity in him; God published salvation by Christ, but denounced troubles and sorrows in this life, Ge. i.—iii.; Ex. 20.11; Ec. 7.29; Ro. 5.12-21; 1 Co. 15.22. |
| 2 | 4003 | | | Cain, and not long after, Abel is born, perhaps with twin-sisters. Some years after Cain becomes a husbandman, Abel a shepherd, Ge. iv. |
| 129 | 3875 | | | Cain and Abel offer sacrifice. Cain murders Abel, and is punished; but his family increases, Ge. iv.; He. 11.4; 1 Jn. 3.12; Jude. Next year Seth is born. |
| 235 | 3769 | | | Enos is born. Public societies for God's worship are introduced, to distinguish the Sethites from the offspring of Cain, Ge. 5.6; 4.26. |
| 987 | 3017 | | | After predicting the last judgment, pious Enoch is translated to heaven without tasting of death, Ge. 5.23,24; He. 11.5; Jude 14,15. |
| 1056 | 2948 | | | Noah, the famous preacher and patriarch, is born, to the great joy of Lamech his father, Ge. 5.23; Eze. 14.14,20. |
| 1536 | 2468 | | | The Sethites marrying with the Cainites, men become abominably wicked. Noah warns them of the flood, and begins to build his ark, Ge. vi.; He. 11.7; 1 Pe. 3.20; 2 Pe. 2.5. |
| 1656 | 2348 | | | Methuselah, son of Enoch, dies. The world, with perhaps double of its present inhabitants, is drowned by a flood. Noah, his family, and some animals are preserved in the ark, Ge. 5.27; vii.; Lu. 17.26,27; Mat. 24.37-39; Job 22.16; 1 Pe. 3.19,20; 2 Pe. 2.5; 3.6. |
| 1657 | 2347 | | | The flood ceases; the ark settles in Armenia: Noah, his sons, and the animals, came forth of the ark. Noah offers sacrifices of thanksgiving. God covenants with him; allows him to eat flesh; forbids murder; gives him the rainbow as a token that the earth should never more be drowned. Not long after Noah plants a vineyard; is drunk; and foretells the fate of his seed, Ge. viii. ix.; Is. 54.8-10. |
| 1760 | 2244 | | | Men, being generally reconverted, build the Tower of BABEL. God confounds their language and disperses them. Nimrod founds a kingdom in Chaldea, Asshur another in Assyria, and Mizraim a third in Egypt, Ge. 10.9-13. |
| 2008 | 1996 | | | Two years after the death of Noah Abraham is born in the 130th year of Terah. Sarai or Ischah, his brother Haran's daughter, is born ten years after, Ge. 11.26-32; 17.17; 20.12. |
| 2079 | 1925 | | | Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, subdues the kingdoms of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c., Ge. 14.1-3. |
| 2083 | 1921 | | | Terah dying after they had dwelt five years in Haran. Abraham, directed by God, and encouraged by a promise of Christ and a numerous seed, enters Canaan. The land is promised to his seed. A famine forces him into Egypt. From hence the 430 years of the Hebrew sojourning are reckoned by some, Ge. xii.; Jos. 24.2,3; Ne. 9.7,8; Ps. 105.9-15; Ex. 12.40,41; Ac. 7.2-5; Ga. 3.17; He. 11.8. |
| | | | | Returning to Canaan, Lot retires to Sodom. God renews his covenant with Abraham. He removed southward to Hebron, and built an altar for the worship of God, Ge. xiii. |
| 2091 | 1913 | | | After twelve years' servitude the kings of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar revolted; Chedorlaomer and his allies ravage their country, defeat their troops, take Lot and others captive. Abraham defeats the conquerors, rescues the prisoners, recovers the spoil, and is blessed by Melchizedek. God promises him a numerous seed, and Canaan for their inheritance, Ge. 9.25; xiv. xv.; He. 7.1-11; Ac. 7.6,7; Ga. 3.17; Ps. 105.9-15; Ne. 9.7,8. |
| 2093 | 1911 | | | Despairing of the promised seed by herself, Sarah gives Hagar to Abraham for a concubine, that she might bear it. After Hagar had fled from the family and returned, she bears Ishmael, Ge. xvi.; 25.12-18; Ga. 4.22-31. |
| 2106 | 1898 | | | God constitutes Abram, and his seed by Isaac, his peculiar people; appoints circumcision as the seal of this covenant; changes Abram's and Sarai's names. Soon after he and two angels visit Abraham and Sarah, renew the promise of Isaac's birth; Abraham intercedes for the preservation of Sodom, &c.; the two angels warn Lot and his family to remove; Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim are destroyed by fire and brimstone; Lot's wife is turned into a pillar of salt; the Dead Sea is formed out of this country. Not long after Lot, made drunk by his two daughters, commits incest with them, and hence the Moabites and Ammonites proceeded, Ge. xvii.—xix.; Is. 13.19; 1.9, 10; Eze. 16.44-50; Zep. 2.9; 2 Pe. 2.6-8; Jude 7; Am. 4.11. |
| 2108 | 1896 | | | Sarah bears Isaac. About three or four years after Ishmael mocks him, and he and Hagar are in consequence expelled |
| | | | | from the family, Ge. xxi.; Ac. 7.8; Ro. 9.9; He. 11.11,12; Ga. 4.22-31. |
| 2144 | 1860 | | | To try Abraham's faith and obedience, God commands him to offer Isaac in sacrifice. Abraham readily obeys; Isaac's death is prevented, and Abraham and his family greatly blessed, Ge. xxii.; He. 11.17-19; Ja. 2.21. Soon after Sarah dies, and is buried at Machpelah, Ge. xxiii. 49.30-32. |
| 2148 | 1856 | | | Isaac, by the direction of Providence, is married to Rebekah the daughter of Bethuel, his Syrian cousin, Ge. xxiv. Shem, the son of Noah, dies ten years after, Ge. 11.10,11. |
| 2208 | 1796 | | | Esau having sold Jacob his birthright, marries two Canaanites, which grieves his parents, Ge. 25.27-34; 26.34; He. 12.16. Being blessed of God, Isaac greatly prospers, notwithstanding the envy of the Philistines, Ge. xxvi. |
| 2244 | 1760 | | | Instigated by his mother, Jacob fraudulently obtains his father's principal blessing. Esau's rage hereat obliges him to flee to Mesopotamia. He receives a vision and a promise at Bethel; arrives at Haran, and serves Laban his uncle, Ge. xxvii.—xxix.; He. 12.16; Ge. 31.13; Ho. 12.3,4,12. |
| 2251 | 1753 | | | For his service Jacob receives Leah and Rachel, his two cousins, for wives; by whom, and their handmaids, within fourteen years, he has eleven sons and one daughter. God also renders him rich in flocks, Ge. xxxix. xxx.; Ho. 12.12; Ac. 7.8. |
| 2265 | 1739 | | | After serving Laban for twenty years, Jacob and his family privately remove to Canaan. Laban pursues, but is pacified. Jacob meets with angels at Mahanaim; with God at Peniel; and with Esau in love, Ge. xxxi.—xxxiii. |
| 2270 | 1734 | | | Dinah is deflowered, and the Shechemites circumcised and murdered. Jacob removes to Bethel, where Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, dies. Soon after Rachel dies in childbirth of Benjamin. Reuben commits incest with Bilhah, Ge. xxxiv. xxxv. |
| 2276 | 1728 | | | Joseph, now seventeen years old, is for his dreams hated, and sold by his brethren to Ishmaelites and Midianites, who sell him to Potiphar the Egyptian, Ge. xxxvii.; Ps. 105.17; Ac. 7.9. |
| 2286 | 1718 | | | About seventeen years after his marriage with the daughter of Shuah the Canaanite, Judah commits incest with Tamar his daughter-in-law, who bears him Pharez and Zerah. Joseph refuses to commit adultery with his mistress; and by false accusation is imprisoned, Ge. xxxviii. xxxix.; Ps. 105.18. |
| 2288 | 1716 | | | Isaac dies, aged 180 years. Soon after Esau removes from Canaan, and finally settles in Mount Seir; where his family, cohabiting with the Horites, wonderfully increase, Ge. 35.28,29; xxxvi. |
| 2289 | 1715 | | | Having, perhaps two years before, interpreted the dreams of the baker and butler, Joseph is liberated, and interprets those of Pharaoh; is made ruler of Egypt, and married to a princess, Ge. xl.xli.; Ps. 105.19-22; Ac. 7.10. |
| 2296 | 1708 | | | After seven plentiful years, a terrible famine begins in Egypt and the place about, Ge. 42.52; Ac. 7.11; Ps. 105.16. |
| 2298 | 1706 | | | After Jacob's sons had twice gone to Egypt to buy corn, and been tried by Joseph, he and all his family go and reside there |

| Year of the World | Before Christ. | | Year of the World | Before Christ. | | Year of the World | Before Christ. | |
|-------------------|----------------|---|-------------------|----------------|--|-------------------|----------------|--|
| 2909 | 1095 | The Israelites, weary of God's deputy-judges, request a king, to render them like the neighbouring nations. Saul is made king, and defeats the Ammonites. Samuel resigns his government, 1 Sa. viii.-xii.; Ac. 13.20,21; He. 11.32-35. | 2984 | 1020 | they return to their allegiance, 2 Sa. xv.-xx.; Ps. ii.-vi. xlii.-xlii. | 3034 | 970 | selves for three years regularly, and lived prosperously. But afterwards revolting to idolatry, Shishak, king of Egypt, ravages their country, and pillages Jerusalem and the temple, 1 Ki. 14.21-31; 2 Ch. xi. xii. |
| 2939 | 1065 | For intermeddling with priestly work, for neglecting the utter destruction of the Amalekites and their property, and for consulting with a witch, Saul's army is routed by the Philistines; and he murders himself about two years after the death of Samuel. David, who had been anointed king by Samuel about seven years before, and who for about four years had been persecuted, and had composed several of his psalms, as vi. vii. xxxiv. xxxv. lii.-lii. lxiii. lxiv. cxx. cxlii. cxliii. &c., returns from the country of the Philistines; re-sents Saul's death upon an Amalekite; laments over Saul and Jonathan's death; and praises God for his deliverances, Ps. ix. xviii. Directed of God he repairs to Hebron, where he is made king of Judah. Meanwhile Abner made Ishbosheth king of Israel, 1 Sa. xlii.-xxxix.; 1 Ch. x.; 2 Sa. i. ii. xxi. | 2987 | 1017 | David numbers his subjects. God punishes his sin in the death of 70,000 of them. By his deep humiliation and sacrifice he stops the plague. He purchases a spot for the temple to be built on, 2 Sa. xxiv.; 1 Ch. xxi.; 26.23,24. | 3046 | 958 | Abijam succeeds Rehoboam. He routs Jeroboam's army of 800,000, slays 500,000 of them, and takes Beth-el and other cities from him, 1 Ki. 15.1-8; 2 Ch. xlii. |
| 2949 | 1055 | After Ishbosheth had reigned seven years, much of which time had been spent in skirmishes with the servants of David, he is deserted by Abner, and murdered by two of his servants; upon which the principal men of Israel, with a large body of the people, assemble and make David their king, 2 Sa. ii.-v.; 1 Ch. xii.; Ps. 89. 19,20, &c.; Ac. 13.22; Ps. 78.68-72. | 2988 | 1016 | David being now extremely infirm, Abishag is procured to sleep with him as his concubine. Assisted by Joab and Abiathar, Adonijah his eldest son attempts to seize the throne; but, by the activity of Nathan the prophet and Bathsheba, David gives orders to anoint Solomon his successor, 1 Ki. i. | 3049 | 955 | Asa succeeds Abijam; reigns forty-one years; zealously extirpates idolatry; strengthens his kingdom with forts; defeats an Ethiopian army of 1,000,000; renews his subjects' covenant with God; and deposes Maachah his idolatrous grandmother, 2 Ch. xiv. xv.; 1 Ki. 15.9-15. |
| 2956 | 1048 | After taking Jerusalem from the Jebusites, and building himself a palace there, and defeating the Philistines twice, David, attended with many thousands of Israelites, brings up the ark of God with great solemnity from Kirjath-jearim to a tent which he had formed for it on Mount Zion, 2 Sa. v. vi.; 1 Ch. xlii.-xvi.; Ps. 78. 68,69; xxiv. xlvii. lxviii. xciii. xcv.-cxlii. cxliii. cxlii.-cl. | 2989 | 1015 | Having made immense preparations for the building of the temple, and given Solomon a plan of it, and a charge concerning it, he fixes the order of the priests, Levites, singers, and porters, for the temple; as either now or before he had regulated the trained bands and the royal property; and having solemnly charged Solomon and the princes of Israel to cleave to the Lord, he soon after died.—Not long after, Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei were slain by Solomon's order, 1 Ch. xxii.-xxix.; 1 Ki. iii. | 3052 | 952 | Baasha murders Nadab the son of Jeroboam and the whole family, and reigns over Israel. Engaged in a war with Baasha, Asa hires the Syrians treacherously to invade the kingdom of Israel, and imprisons the prophet who reproved his conduct, 1 Ki. 15.16-22; 1 Ch. 16.1-10. |
| 2970 | 1035 | Bathsheba, perhaps the grand-daughter of Abithophel, now David's wife, bears Solomon, 2 Sa. 12.24,25; 1 Ch. 3.5; 14.4. | 3013 | 991 | After great licentiousness with heathenish women, and apostasy to their idolatries, Solomon, being reproved by a prophet, repents; writes his Ecclesiastes, and perhaps his Proverbs; and dies, 1 Ki. xi. Ne. 13.26; Ec. i.-xii.; Pr. i.-xxix. | 3086 | 918 | Ahab, still more wicked than his father, reigns over Israel; marries Jezebel a Zidonian princess, and by her advice introduces the worship of Baal; Hiel, with the loss of his sons, rebuilds accursed Jericho, 1 Ki. 16.29-34; Mi. 6.16. |
| 2971 | 1033 | Amnon, David's eldest son, deflours his sister; and after two years is murdered by Absalom her full brother, 2 Sa. 12.10; xiii. | 3029 | 975 | Provoked by Rehoboam's haughty threatenings, the Ephraimites and other nine tribes revolt from the family of David, and form a separate kingdom under Jeroboam the son of Nebat. To prevent their return to Judah, by going up to Jerusalem at the solemn feasts, he establishes the idolatrous worship of the calves of Dan and Beth-el among them. Nor could the reproof of the man of God, nor the miracles attending it, render him penitent, 1 Ki. xii. xiii.; 2 Ch. x. | 3090 | 914 | Asa dying, Jehoshaphat succeeds him. He reforms his kingdom, fortifies his cities, and forms a militia of 1,160,000, 2 Ch. xvii.; 1 Ki. 22.41-46. He first made friendship with the kings of Israel, and took Ahab's daughter to be the wife of Jehoram his son. |
| 2972 | 1032 | After Absalom had lived three years an exile with his grandfather Talmi, king of Geshur, he is, by Joab's means, brought back to Jerusalem, and two years after is reconciled to his father David, 2 Sa. 13. 37-39; xiv. | 3030 | 970 | Many Levites and others retiring from the kingdom of Jeroboam to that of Rehoboam, he and his subjects conducted them | — | — | In answer to Elijah's prayer, a drought of three years and a half plagues the kingdom of Israel. Ravens at first, and afterwards a poor widow of Zarephath, whose son he restores to life, feed Elijah. |
| 2977 | 1027 | Absalom rebels against David; is joined by Abithophel, who hanged himself, and by most of the Israelites. David and his friends flee over Jordan: there Absalom's huge host is defeated, and himself slain by Joab. After some altercation with the men of Judah the Israelites again revolt under Sheba; but he being slain, | 3000 | 1004 | After great licentiousness with heathenish women, and apostasy to their idolatries, Solomon, being reproved by a prophet, repents; writes his Ecclesiastes, and perhaps his Proverbs; and dies, 1 Ki. xi. Ne. 13.26; Ec. i.-xii.; Pr. i.-xxix. | — | — | Having by his sacrifice, burned with fire from heaven, demonstrated that not Baal, but JEHOVAH, was the true God, he causes the prophets of Baal to be slain, and procures rain. Terrified by the threatenings of Jezebel, he retires far southward to Sinai; but is reproved by God for his flight, and ordered back to anoint Jehu king over Israel, Hazael over Syria, and Elisha prophet in his own room, 1 Ki. xvii.-xix. |
| 2983 | 1021 | Absalom rebels against David; is joined by Abithophel, who hanged himself, and by most of the Israelites. David and his friends flee over Jordan: there Absalom's huge host is defeated, and himself slain by Joab. After some altercation with the men of Judah the Israelites again revolt under Sheba; but he being slain, | 3013 | 991 | Provoked by Rehoboam's haughty threatenings, the Ephraimites and other nine tribes revolt from the family of David, and form a separate kingdom under Jeroboam the son of Nebat. To prevent their return to Judah, by going up to Jerusalem at the solemn feasts, he establishes the idolatrous worship of the calves of Dan and Beth-el among them. Nor could the reproof of the man of God, nor the miracles attending it, render him penitent, 1 Ki. xii. xiii.; 2 Ch. x. | 3103 | 901 | Benhadad king of Syria having insolently threatened the destruction of Samaria, God punishes him with a signal defeat by a handful of Israelites. Next year, to punish his captain's blasphemy, his army is almost utterly cut off. He submits; and Ahab, to his own ruin, makes a treaty of peace with him, 1 Ki. xx. |
| | | | — | — | Many Levites and others retiring from the kingdom of Jeroboam to that of Rehoboam, he and his subjects conducted them | 3104 | 900 | By seizing upon Naboth's vineyard, whom Jezebel had for this purpose basely murdered, Ahab draws upon himself and family fearful denunciations of wrath, but his external repentance for a time defers the execution, 1 Ki. xxi. |
| | | | — | — | Many Levites and others retiring from the kingdom of Jeroboam to that of Rehoboam, he and his subjects conducted them | 3107 | 897 | Having in the preceding year associated their eldest sons, Ahaziah and Jehoram, in power with themselves, Ahab and Jehoshaphat, encouraged by the false prophets, march against the Syrians for the recovery of Ramoth-Gilead. Jehoshaphat is endangered, and Ahab slain, 1 Ki. xxii.; 2 Ch. xviii. |
| | | | — | — | Many Levites and others retiring from the kingdom of Jeroboam to that of Rehoboam, he and his subjects conducted them | 3108 | 896 | While Jehoshaphat, reproved by a prophet, proceeds in the reformation of his kingdom, Ahaziah, the successor of Ahab, dies |

CHRONOLOGICAL INDEX OF SCRIPTURE HISTORY.

| Year of the World | Before Christ | of a fall from a window. Elijah destroys two idolatrous troops by fire from heaven; is translated. Elisha succeeds him; heals the bitter water and barren fields of Jericho; and by two she-bears destroys forty-two insolent children of Bethel, 1 Ki. 22. 49-53; 2 Ch. xix.; 2 Ki. i.iii. | Year of the World | Before Christ | of his father; ravages the country of the Edomites with inhuman barbarity; provokes Jehoash king of Israel to war, in which his army is routed, Jerusalem and the temple pillaged, and himself taken prisoner, 2 Ki. 4.1-14; 2 Ch. xxv. | Year of the World | Before Christ | Judah. He, with great zeal and diligence, reforms his kingdom; refuses to pay tribute to the Assyrians; and reduces the Philistines, 2 Ch. xxxix.-xxxix.; 2 Ki. 18.1-8; Is. 14.29. |
|-------------------|---------------|---|-------------------|---------------|---|-------------------|---------------|--|
| 8109 | 895 | The Moabites, who had been subject to the Israelites since David conquered them, rebelling after the death of Ahab, Jehoram his son, assisted by Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom, and miraculously supplied with water by Elisha, ravages their country, 2 Ki. iii. | — | — | Jonah the prophet foretells the relief of the Israelites. Unwilling to denounce the destruction of Nineveh, he flees to Tarsish. A whale swallows him up, and, after three days, casts him out upon dry land. He warns the Ninevites; they repent and are spared, 2 Ki. 14.25; Jonah i.-iv.; Mat. 12.39-41; 16.4. | 3283 | 721 | Finding that Hoshea had, with the assistance of the Egyptians, conspired to render himself independent, Shalmaneser invades his kingdom; demolishes Samaria his capital; takes him prisoner; and transports the remaining Israelites to Assyria and Media, whence few, if any of them, ever returned to Canaan, Is. vii. viii. xxiv. xxviii.; Ho. iv.-xiii.; Am. ii.-ix.; Mi. ii. iii. vi. vii.; 2 Ki. 17.3-23; 18.9-12; 2 Ch. 30.6; Ne. 9.32. He soon after ravaged Phenicia, and besieged Tyre five years, &c. |
| — | — | Elisha multiplies the widow's oil; promises a son to the Shunammite, and restores him to life; renders poison harmless; multiplies provision; heals Naaman of his leprosy, and smites Gehazi with it; makes iron swim; blinds and opens the eyes of the Syrian soldiers. The Syrians, affrighted by God, raise the siege of Samaria, when the inhabitants were almost famished, and leave plenty of provision, 2 Ki. iv.-vii. | 3180 | 824 | After being his father's partner twelve years, Jeroboam succeeds his father Jehoash, and restores the kingdom of Israel almost to its ancient glory, 2 Ki. 14.16, 23-28. | 3291 | 713 | Having reduced the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Philistines, if not also the Egyptians, Sennacherib the Assyrian, contrary to treaty, invades Judea, and takes all the fenced cities except Jerusalem: his army is cut off; perhaps in the third year, by an angel, on the east of Jerusalem. During this war Hezekiah was miraculously delivered from his deadly distemper, Am. i. iii.; Is. xv. xxiv.-xxviii.; Mi. i.-iii.; 2 Ki. xviii.-xx.; 2 Ch. xxxii. |
| 8112 | 892 | Meanwhile Jehoshaphat is miraculously victorious over the allied army which had invaded his kingdom with a view to extirpate the Israelites, 2 Ch. xx.; Ps. lxxviii. lxxxiii. — He allots his younger sons presents and fenced cities; and, for the second time, installs Jehoram on his throne, 2 Ch. 21.2, 3; 2 Ki. 8.16. | 3194 | 810 | Amaziah king of Judah being murdered by his subjects, Azariah or Uzziah succeeds him and reigns prosperously fifty-two years, 2 Ki. 14.21, 22; 15.1-4; 2 Ch. 26.1-15. | 3294 | 710 | Chaldean ambassadors coming to Hezekiah, he vainly shows them his wealth. God threatens him, that it and his seed should be carried captive to Babylon, Is. xxxix.; 2 Ki. 20.12-21; 2 Ch. 32.25-33. |
| 8115 | 889 | After Jehoshaphat's death, Jehoram, being sole king, introduces the idolatry of the house of Ahab his father-in-law into Judea, murders his brethren, and contemns the warning which the prophet Elijah had left him. The Edomites and Libnites revolt. The Philistines, Arabs, and others, ravage his kingdom and murder his family, 2 Ch. xxi.; 2 Ki. 8.16-24. | — | — | The prophets Amos, Hosea, and perhaps Joel, prophesy; reprove the Israelites for their sins, and foretell their approaching, but just judgments, Am. i.-ix.; Ho. i.-xiv.; Joel i.-iii. | — | — | While Judah flourishes, Isaiah, and perhaps Micah, prophesy, Is. xl.-lxvi.; Mi. iv. v. |
| 8119 | 885 | Ahaziah, his only surviving son, succeeds; and having reigned about a year alone, he and Jehoram king of Israel, and other male descendants of Ahab, together with Jezebel and the priests of Baal, are slain by Jehu, to whom God had given the kingdom of Israel, 2 Ki. 8.25, 29; ix. x.; 2 Ch. xxii. | 3221 | 783 | A terrible earthquake is felt in Judea, Am. 1.1; Zec. 14.5; Jeroboam II. dying, a civil war, at least an interregnum of eleven years and a half, ensues, at the end of which Zachariah his son, the fourth in descent from Jehu, reigns six months, 2 Ki. 15.8-12; 10.30. | 3306 | 698 | Manasseh succeeds Hezekiah. He introduces idolatry, persecution, and other abominations, 2 Ki. xxi. 24, 3, 4; 22.1, 17; Jer. 15.4; 2 Ch. 33.1-10. |
| — | — | After Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, had murdered all the seed-royal of David she could find, and had tyrannized six years, Jehoiaha the high-priest, assisted by his fellow-priests and nobles, installs Joash, Ahaziah's son, when seven years of age, on the throne; kills Athaliah and Matan her idolatrous high-priest; reforms the nation; and renews their covenant with God, 2 Ki. xi.; 2 Ch. xxiii. | 3233 | 771 | Shallum his murderer had reigned but one month, when Menahem, probably Zechariah's general, slew him, and reigned ten years. While he was butchering his opponents, Pul king of Assyria invaded the kingdom, and laid it under tribute, 2 Ki. 15.13-22. | 3328 | 676 | Esarhaddon invades Judea; carries Manasseh prisoner to Babylon; where he repents, and is restored to his kingdom, perhaps as a tributary of the Assyrians, 2 Ch. 33.11-19. |
| 8149 | 855 | Jehoash, in the twenty-third year of his reign, gives orders for repairing the temple, which are executed with great prudence and fidelity, 2 Ki. xii.; 2 Ch. xxiv. Jehu king of Israel is succeeded by Jehoahaz his son. Under both, especially the latter, Hazael, who, by murdering his master Benhadad, had become king of Syria, terribly ravaged their kingdom, 2 Ki. 10.29-36; 13.1-9; 8.7-15. | 3245 | 759 | Having murdered Pekahiah the son of Menahem, Pekah begins to reign over Israel, and reigns twenty years. | 3363 | 641 | Josiah, a child of eight years, succeeds his obstinately wicked father Amon; he, with great zeal, reforms his kingdom; repairs the temple; renews his subjects' covenant with God; solemnly celebrates the pass-over. During his reign Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesy, if not also Nahum and Habakkuk, Je. i., perhaps to xvii.; Zep. i.-iii.; Na. i.-iii.; Ha. i.-iii. |
| 8164 | 840 | Joash, king of Judah, and his subjects, turn idolaters. He murders Zechariah the priest, son of Jehoiaha, and his own cousin, for reproving him. Soon after the Syrians ravage his kingdom, and his servants murder him, 2 Ki. 12.17-21; 2 Ch. 24.17-27. | 3246 | 758 | Next year Jotham begins his prosperous reign over Judah; 2 Ki. 15.27, 28, 32-33; 2 Ch. xxvii. | 3394 | 610 | Unadvisedly giving battle to Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, Josiah is slain; after which the kingdom of Judah becomes miserable, 2 Ki. 23.29, 30; 2 Ch. 35.20-24. |
| 8165 | 839 | Jehoash, grandson of Jehu, succeeds his father Jehoahaz as sole king of Israel; visits the prophet Elisha on his death-bed; according to whose predictions he gives the Syrians three terrible defeats, 2 Ki. 13.10-23; 14.15, 16. | 3262 | 742 | Ahaz succeeds Jotham, and reigns very wickedly and unhappily. Pekah king of Israel kills 120,000 of his best troops in one battle, and carries off 200,000 prisoners, which by order of the prophet Oded, are sent back. He and Resin king of Syria ravage Judea, and intend to render it tributary to them, under a deputy of their own. The Edomites and Philistines, from the south and west, also distress it. Ahaz hires Tiglath-pileser of Assyria to attack his enemies, who, after murdering multitudes of the Syrians and Israelites on the east of Jordan and in Galilee, carries the rest captive to Media. Ahaz introduces the Syrian idolatry, and pollutes the temple, 2 Ch. xxviii.; Is. 7.1-9; 2 Ki. xvi.; 15.29. | 3395 | 609 | Jehoahaz, whom the people had made king, being carried prisoner into Egypt, Pharaoh-necho makes Jehoiahim king, who reigns wickedly eleven years, 2 Ki. 23.31-37; 2 Ch. 36.1-5. Under him Jeremiah and Urijah, if not also Habakkuk and Zephaniah, prophesy, Je. xix. xx. xxvi. xxii. xxiii. xxv. xxxv. xxxvi. xlv. xlvii.-xlix.; Ha. i.-iii.; Zep. i.-iii. |
| 8168 | 838 | Amaziah succeeds his father Joash on the throne of Judah, punishes the murderers | 3274 | 730 | Hoshea, who had killed Pekah nine years before, at last, by a long civil war, renders himself king of Israel, and is less wicked than his predecessors. Shalmaneser king of Assyria renders him tributary, 2 Ki. 15.30; 17.1, 2. | 3401 | 603 | Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean, now partner in the kingdom with his father, invades Judea, renders Jehoiahim his tributary; carries off Daniel, his companions, and others, to Babylon, with part of the vessels of the temple of God, which he places in that of Belus, 2 Ch. 36.6, 7; Je. 35.11; 29.10; Is. 39.7; Da. 1.2, 3, 7, &c. |

| — | — | Daniel makes known and interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the image, which the wise men could not, Da.ii. | 3466 | 538 | While the Medes and Persians besiege Babylon, Belshazzar and his lords celebrate an impious revel. A hand-writing, interpreted by Daniel, denounces their immediate ruin. That same night Babylon is taken, Belshazzar slain, and his monarchy rendered subject to the Medes and Persians, Da.v.; Is.xiii.xiv.xxi.xlvi.xlvii.; Je.25.12; 27.7; 1.li.; Hab.ii. | 3574 | 430 | Malachi the prophet reproves the Jews for their contempt of God's ordinances, sacrilege, marriages with heathens, and cruelty to their Jewish wives, Mal.i.-iv. |
| 3403 | 601 | After a long and furious war, Nineveh is destroyed by the Medes, assisted by Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean, Na.i.-iii.; Eze. xxxi. | — | — | Daniel is advanced by Darius the Mede; but by the envy of his fellow-rulers, is cast into the den of lions. He is delivered and his accusers destroyed, Da.vi. He solemnly supplicates the restoration of the Jewish nation; has the coming of Christ, and the disasters attending it, intimated to him by the angel Gabriel, Da. ix. | 3591 | 413 | The Egyptians revolt from Darius Nothus, king of Persia. It required sixty-four years to reduce them, Is. xix.; Eze. xxix. xxx.; Zec. 10.11; Joel 3.19; Is. 27.1. |
| 3405 | 599 | His son Jehoiakin, whom, it seems, he had made his partner ten years before, after reigning alone three months and ten days, surrenders himself to Nebuchadnezzar, who carries him and his family, courtiers, and principal magistrates, warriors, and artificers, in all 18,000, to Babylon; together with Ezekiel the priest, afterwards a prophet, and Mordecai, and part of the furniture of the temple, 2 Ki. 20.17,18; Is. 39.6,7; 2 Ch. 36.9,10; 2 Ki. 24.6-10; Je. 22.24-30; 29.1,2; xxiv.; Eze. 17.4,12; 1.2, 3; Is. 2.6. | 3469 | 535 | After observing the feast of tabernacles, and making preparation for seven months, the Jews, amidst joy and grief, lay the foundation of the second temple, Ezr. iii. But their Samaritan neighbours, by their open influence at court, and by accusing them as rebels to Cambyzes and Artaxerxes Magus, long hinder the building, Ezr. iv. Daniel hath his last vision, x.-xii. | 3655 | 349 | After reducing the revolted Cyprians and Phenicians, and ravaging part of Judea, Artaxerxes Ochus, king of Persia, finally reduces the Egyptians; since which they have never been governed by a prince of their own, Eze. 29.14,15; 30.13; Zec. 10.11; Is. xix. |
| 3406 | 598 | Zedekiah, brother of Jehoiakim, being made king by Nebuchadnezzar, as his tributary, reigns wickedly. Jeremiah continues prophesying in Judea, Je. xxi. xxvii.-xxxiv. xxxvii. xxxviii. l.li.; if not also xix.xx.; and Ezekiel begins to prophesy in Chaldea, Eze. i.-xxxi. | 3480 | 524 | Cambyzes, after the death of Amasis, ravages Egypt and part of Ethiopia, and ruins his own army. | 3670 | 334 | After the Persians and Greeks had been generally in a state of war for 160 years, Alexander the Great marches 35,000 Greeks into Asia, with whom in six years he conquers the whole Persian empire, Da. vi. vii.; 8.5-7; 10.20; 11.3; Zec. 6.6. |
| — | — | Zedekiah, depending on the Egyptians, rebelled; to punish which, Nebuchadnezzar, after a siege of almost two years, burns Jerusalem and the temple; carries off captive all the Jews who remained except a few of the poorer sort; whom, together with Jeremiah, now liberated from prison, he commits to the care of Gedaliah. But Gedaliah being quickly murdered, the rest retire into Egypt, and force Jeremiah along with them, Je. liii. xxxix.-xliv.; 2 Ki. xxv.; 2 Ch. xxxvi.; La. i.-v. | 3484 | 520 | Encouraged by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, and after this by a decree of Darius Hystaspes in their favour, the Jews resume the building of their temple; and in about four years finish and dedicate it, about seventy-two years after it had been burned by the Chaldeans, Ezr. v.vi.; Hag. i.ii.; Zec. i.-xiv. About this time Darius reduced the revolted Babylonians, Is. xiii. xiv. xxi. xlvii.; Je. l.li. | 3672 | 332 | Alexander furiously destroys Tyre and Philistia. The Jews and Egyptians submit to him, Is. 23.1-18; Zec. 9.1-8. |
| 3416 | 588 | Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Obadiah prophesy, Je. xliii. xlv.; Eze. xxxii.-xlvi.; Ob. i.; Ps. lxxiv. cxxxix. cxxxvii. are penned; and Jeremiah's Lamentations, i.-v. | 3489 | 515 | Perhaps about this time Esther was made queen of Persia instead of Vashti; and after five years the plot and ruin of Haman took place. But some historians place these events thirty-six years later, under Xerxes, or rather fifty-six, under Artaxerxes Longimanus, Es. i.-x. | 3681 | 323 | Alexander dies. Within fifteen years after his whole family is murdered, and his empire divided among four of his principal generals, Da. 7.6; 8.8; 11.4. The two principal divisions were the kingdom of empire of Egypt on the south of Canaan and of Syria on the north. For more than 150 years these were generally in a state of war one with another; nevertheless the Jews, whose country lay betwixt them, were marvellously protected by Providence, Da. 11.5-29; Zec. 10.8. |
| — | — | Having desolated the countries of Ammon, Moab, Edom, Phenicia, Philistia, and Egypt, Nebuchadnezzar returns to Babylon, where, out of his immense spoils, he forms a gigantic image to his god Belus. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, refusing to worship it, are miraculously preserved in the fiery furnace, and are promoted to great honours, Je. xxv. xlv.-xlix.; Eze. xxv.-xxxi. xxxv.; Is. xv.-xxiii.; Hab. i.ii.; Da. iii. He also builds palaces, hanging gardens, the temple of Belus, &c., Da. 4.30. | 3490 | 514 | The Egyptians revolt from Darius. About six years after Xerxes his son reduces them. | 3829 | 175 | Antiochus Epiphanes succeeding his brother Seleucus, persecutes the Jews, and sets to sale their high-priesthood. He makes four attempts to rob Ptolemy his nephew of the kingdom of Egypt. |
| 3433 | 571 | Daniel interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the tree cut down. Next year Nebuchadnezzar, for his pride, is deprived of his reason, and dethroned for seven years, Da. iv.; 5.18-21. | 3517 | 487 | Darius having for the last sixteen years of his life carried on an unsuccessful war with the Greeks, Xerxes his son, after four years' preparation, invades their country with an army of some millions; but he and his Carthaginian allies are shamefully repulsed, Da. 11.2; 10.20; 7.5; 8.4. | 3834 | 170 | In his return from his second expedition into Egypt he takes Jerusalem, murders 40,000, and takes as many more prisoners to be sold for slaves. |
| 3442 | 562 | Nebuchadnezzar hath his reason restored; he acknowledges God's sovereignty; is restored to his throne; and dies, having reigned forty-five years. | 3525 | 479 | Artaxerxes Longimanus succeeds his father Xerxes. The Egyptians again revolt, but are reduced. | 3836 | 168 | In his return from his fourth expedition, when he was checked by the peremptory demands of the Roman ambassadors, he stops the daily sacrifice, and attempts to abolish the Jewish worship. |
| 3443 | 561 | Evil-merodach, his son, succeeds, and exalts Jehoiachin king of the Jews, 2 Ki. 25. 27-30; Je. 52.31-34. | 3540 | 464 | Ezra is sent to Jerusalem by Artaxerxes as his deputy-governor of Judea. With great zeal he separates the Jews from their strange wives, Ezr. vii.-x. Perhaps it was now that Esther was married to Ahasuerus, and Haman's plot and ruin five years after, Es. i.-x.; and, by her influence, Artaxerxes greatly favoured the Jews. | 3840 | 164 | After some years' struggling, Judas Maccabeus defeats Antiochus' army at Jerusalem, restores the worship of God in the temple, and institutes the feast of dedication. Not long after this Antiochus dies miserably, Da. 11.21-35; 8.23-25; Zec. 1.20,21; 9.13-17; 12.2-7; Jn. 10.22. |
| 3449 | 555 | Neriglissar, Nebuchadnezzar's son-in-law, who had murdered Evil-merodach, and his family being murdered in their turn, Belshazzar, the son of Evil-merodach, becomes king of Babylon, Je. 27.7. Daniel hath his vision of the four beasts; and about two years after, of the ram and he goat, Da. vii. viii. | 3547 | 457 | Nehemiah is appointed deputy-governor of Judea, and rebuilds Jerusalem. Con- | — | — | For thirty years after, Judas and his brethren Jonathan and Simeon protect their nation; governing their church as high priests, and their state as civil rulers dependent on the Syro-Grecians. |
| — | — | — | 3559 | 445 | — | 3870 | 184 | After this John Hircanus the son of Simon, and Alexander Jannaeus his son, having rendered the Jewish nation independent, reign prosperously for about fifty years, and subdue the Samaritans, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and Philistines, Is. 11.14; Mi. 4.12,13; Ob. 18-21. |
| — | — | — | — | — | — | 3926 | 78 | After a war of six years with his subjects, Alexander dies. Alexandra his widow wisely governs the state nine years, Hircanus her son being high-priest. |
| — | — | — | — | — | — | 3940 | 64 | After five years' contention between Hircanus, her elder but peaceable son, and Aristobulus the younger, they both apply to the Romans for help. |

| 4035 | 32 | whereupon the Jews attempt to stone him, Jn. viii. The seventy disciples return with a joyful account of their success; he shows the scribe the way to eternal life; delivers the parable of the good Samaritan ; and, leaving Jerusalem, comes to Bethany, where he commends Mary's attention and choice, Lu. 10. 17-42. Returning to Galilee, he instructs his disciples how to pray; delivers the parable of the importunate friend ; dining with a Pharisee, he admonishes him and his brethren of their sin and danger, Lu. 11. 1-13, 37-54; cautions his disciples against hypocrisy and the fear of man; declines to decide a case of property between two brothers; pronounces the parable of the rich fool ; repeats the cautions against covetousness which he had given in his sermon on the mount; inculcates watchfulness for his second coming, and care to entertain his present message, Lu. xii.; urges the necessity of repentance; delivers the parable of the barren fig-tree ; cures a deformed woman on the Sabbath; and, regardless of Herod's hatred, prosecutes his work, Lu. xiii. Invited to dine with a Pharisee, he cures a man of a dropsy on the Sabbath, and vindicates himself; recommends humility and generosity; in his parable of the marriage supper foretells the rejection of the Jews and calling of the Gentiles; and urges a deliberate resolution in religion, Lu. xiv. To vindicate his familiar converse with publicans and sinners he pronounces the parable of the lost sheep , lost piece of silver , and prodigal son , Lu. xv.; and of the unjust steward and rich glutton , Lu. xvi.; and exhorts his disciples to simplicity, forgiving offences, and humility, Lu. 17. 1-11. Travelling through Samaria to Jerusalem, he rebukes the intemperate zeal of James and John against the Samaritans, and heals ten lepers, Lu. 9. 51-56; 17. 12-19. Coming near to Jerusalem, he warns the Jews against expecting a pompous kingdom of the Messiah; and foretells their approaching miseries, Lu. 17. 20-37; and, by his parables of the importunate widow and the humbled publican , he recommends importunity, perseverance, and humility in prayer, Lu. 18. 1-14. At Jerusalem, during the feast of dedication , he opens the eyes of one born blind; encourages him when excommunicated by the Sanhedrim; admonishes the proud Pharisees of their danger; represents himself as the Messiah and shepherd of God's flock, and as one with his Father; and to avoid being stoned as a blasphemer on that account, retires beyond Jordan. | 4036 | 33 | Jn. 12. 1-11; Mat. 26. 6-13; Mar. 14. 3-9. On the first day of the week he rides in triumph to Jerusalem; weeps over it upon sight of it; drives out the traders from the court of the temple, and works miracles there; converses with some Greeks, and retires to Bethany. Returns to Jerusalem; next morning curses the barren fig-tree, and again expels the merchants from the temple, which exasperates the priests; and at even returns to Bethany, Mat. 21. 1-19; Mar. 11. 1-19; Lu. 19. 28-48; Jn. 12. 12-50. Returns to Jerusalem on Tuesday morning; the fig-tree is withered; he confounds the Jewish rulers who had questioned his authority; delivers the parables of the two sons , the vineyard let out to husbandmen , and the marriage-dinner , Mar. 11. 20-33; 12. 1-12; Lu. 20. 1-19; Mat. 21. 20-46; 22. 1-14; confounds the Jews in their attempt to ensnare him about paying tribute; proves the resurrection of the dead; shows what is the great commandment; silences the Pharisees with respect to the Messiah's divinity; and repeats his denunciations against them, Mar. 12. 13-40; Lu. 20. 20-47; Mat. 22. 15-39; xxiii. Going out of the temple at even, he applauds the liberality of the poor widow; foretells his coming to destroy Jerusalem and to judge the world, and the signs thereof; and by the parables of the servants , ten virgins , and talents , and by the description of the last judgment, inculcates watchfulness, sincerity, and activity in religion, Mar. 12. 41-44; Lu. 21. 1-36; Mat. xxiv. xxv. and warns his disciples that he should be betrayed in two days to his enemies. That same night the Jewish rulers plot his death; and Judas coming in at the very time, agrees to betray him, Mat. 26. 1-5, 14-16; Mar. 14. 1, 2, 10, 11; Lu. 21. 37, 38; 22. 1-6. On Thursday he directs two of his disciples to prepare the passover; and having spent that day, and perhaps most of the Wednesday, in solemn prayer, he sits down with his disciples at night, and eats the passover; rebukes their ambition; washes their feet; intimates that Judas should betray him, who thereon retires to the Jewish rulers; he exhorts them to brotherly love; foretells Peter's denial of him; administers the Eucharist, Mat. 26. 17-29; Mar. 14. 12-25; Lu. 22. 7-27; Jn. xiii.; and entertains his disciples with a consolatory discourse, which he concludes with a solemn prayer, Lu. 22. 28-32; Jn. xiv. xvii. After singing a hymn, and warning Peter and his fellow-disciples of their future trial and fall, he retires to the garden of Gethsemane, where, after terrible inward trouble and prayer, he is betrayed by Judas, but makes his apprehenders fall backward, and heals Malchus' ear. Being carried to the palace of Caiaphas, he is examined and abused; Peter thrice denies him, Mat. 26. 30-75; Mar. 14. 26-72; Lu. 22. 31-71; Jn. 18. 1-27. On Friday morning the Jewish rulers remit him to Pilate, who, after examination, sends him to Herod as tetrarch of Galilee . After some insolent abuse he is returned to Pilate as an innocent person . After several attempts to release him, Pilate, protesting his own innocence, condemns him to be crucified to please the Jews, Mat. 27. 1-26; Mar. 15. 1-15; Lu. 23. 1-25; Jn. 18. 28-40; 19. 1-16. Judas repents and hangs himself, Mat. 27. 3-10; Ac. 1. 16-20. Jesus is led to Calvary, bearing his cross, and there nailed to it. While his garments are divided, and himself insulted, he converts a fellow-sufferer; recommends his mother to the care of | 4036 | 33 | John, his beloved disciple; supplicates pardon to his murderers; recommends his departing soul to God; and expires in triumph. Amazing prodigies attend his death; his body being pierced, but not a bone of it broken, is begged and buried by Joseph of Arimathea. His enemies secure the grave by a large stone sealed and a strong guard, Mar. 15. 16-47; Mar. 23. 26-56; Jn. 19. 16-42; Mat. 27. 26-66. Early on the first day of the week Jesus rises from the dead, his grave being opened by angels, who affrighted the guard, and made them run from the sepulchre. Mary Magdalene, finding the grave open, calls Peter and John, who enter into it and return. Mary staying at the grave, Jesus appears to her, Mar. 16. 1-4; Lu. 24. 1, 2, 12; Jn. 20. 1-17. Leaving her he appeared to the other women whom the angel had before informed of his resurrection. This they reported to his incredulous disciples, Mat. 28. 5-10; Mar. 16. 2, 5-11; Lu. 24. 3-11; Jn. 20. 18. While the guard report to the Jewish rulers how they had been terrified by the earthquake and angels, and are instructed to use an ill-formed falsehood, Jesus appears to Peter, and then to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus; and, in fine, to ten of them that evening, Mat. 28. 11-15; Mar. 16. 12, 13; Lu. 24. 13-43; Jn. 20. 19-23; 1 Co. 15. 4, 5. On that day week he appears to all the eleven, and cures Thomas of his unbelief, Jn. 20. 24-29. Some time after he appears to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias; tries Peter's affection, and foretells his martyrdom, Jn. 21. 1-24. He appears to the whole body of his followers in Galilee; and afterwards, on several occasions, to his disciples. At last, leading them out of Jerusalem to the Mount of Olives or Bethany, he, in their sight, ascends into heaven, 1 Co. 15. 6, 7; Mat. 28. 16-20; Mar. 16. 15-20; Lu. 24. 44-52; Jn. 20. 30; 21. 25; Ac. 1. 1-12. The apostles return to Jerusalem. Upon Peter's motion Matthias is elected in the place of Judas, Ac. 1. 13-26. On the tenth day after Jesus' ascension the Holy Ghost is poured out upon his disciples, to guide them into all truth, direct them to work miracles, and to speak the languages they had never learned. That very day the apostles preach, and all the different tribes assembled at Pentecost hear them in their own language, and 3000 are converted to Christ, Joel 2. 28-32; Lu. 24. 49; Mar. 16. 17, 18; Jn. 7. 39; 14. 16-20, 26; 15. 26, 27; 16. 7-15; Ac. ii. Peter and John cure a lame man. Peter adds an affecting discourse to the spectators, Ac. iii. Behaving courageously before the Sanhedrim, they are threatened; but returning to their brethren, they thank God, and are again filled with the Holy Ghost, Ac. 4. 1-31. The number and zeal of the converts still increasing, many devote their substance to the Lord. God's striking Ananias and Sapphira dead for keeping back a part of the price of their lands, and other miracles, promote the enlargement of the church, Ac. 4. 4, 32-37; 5. 1-16. Enraged hereat, the Jewish rulers imprison the twelve apostles; but an angel liberates them. Being again apprehended, they are, by Gamaliel's advice, dismissed with their life, Ac. 5. 17-42. The converts daily increasing, seven deacons are chosen to manage their sacred donations. Stephen, one of them, confounding the Jews with proofs of Jesus' Messiahship, is called before the Sanhedrim as a blasphemer; and while he was making a long defence, is interrupted |

| | | and tumultuously stoned, Ac.vi.vii. A violent persecution ensues at Jerusalem, which scatters all the preachers but the apostles. Philip, another deacon, preaches to the Samaritans. Peter and John, sent by the apostles, go there, and communicate the miraculous influences of the Holy Ghost. Simon, a pretended convert, offers them money for such power, but his offer is detested. Philip baptizes the Ethiopian eunuch, and preaches along the west borders of Canaan, Ac.viii. | | | the Galatians; and where Gallio takes their part against the furious Jews, Ac. xvii.; 18.1-18. An Egyptian Jew pretends to be the Messiah, and is followed by 30,000, whom Felix disperses, Ac.21. 38. | | | 66,95,107,120,160,202,235,250,257,272, and 303, the Christian church was terribly persecuted by the Roman emperors; and heresies and contentions, especially in the interval of persecution, rendered her state very miserable. Meanwhile the Roman empire, by the murder of emperors, by the ravages of the Scythian tribes, and by famines and pestilences, was no less unhappy. These things were foretold by the opening of the second, third, fourth, and fifth seals, Re.6.3-11; 12.1-4. |
| 4038 | 35 | Saul, who had assisted at the stoning of Stephen, and had been a most furious persecutor, is miraculously converted near Damascus, and becomes a most zealous preacher; preaches in Arabia; returns to Damascus; escapes a snare laid for his life. After three years he repairs to Jerusalem; sees Peter and John; but the Jews being enraged at his bold discourses, he is sent to Tarsus in Cilicia, his native place, Ac.7.58; 8.1-3; 22.3-21; 26.4-20; 9.1-30; 1 Co.15.8-10; Ga.1.12-24; 1 Ti. 1.12-16. | 4059 | 56 | Paul returns from Europe to Asia; touches at Ephesus; leaves there Priscilla and Aquila, who had followed him from Corinth; and hastens by Cesarea to Jerusalem against the time of the passover, Ac.18. 18-22. | 4316 | 313 | After a terrible persecution of the Christians for ten years, the heathen emperors and their armies are quite overthrown by Constantine; heathenism is abolished, and Christianity made the established religion of the empire, Re.6.12-17; 12.5-12; Ps. 21.8-12; 110.5,6; 68.28-31. |
| | | The persecutions ceasing, the Jewish converts greatly increase. Peter cures Eneas of a palsy at Lydda, and restores Dorcas to life at Joppa. Called by the order of an angel, encouraged by a vision of animals, and directed by the Holy Ghost, Peter preaches to and baptizes Cornelius and other Gentiles at Cesarea, and, to the great joy of his brethren, accounts for his conduct, Ac.9.31-43; x.; 11.1-18. The gospel is preached at Antioch in Syria with great success. Barnabas and Saul for about a year labour in confirming the converts there. Agabus foretelling a famine, a collection is made for the poor saints at Jerusalem, Ac.11.19-30. | 4060 | 57 | After visiting the regions of Galatia and Phrygia, Paul preaches a considerable time at Ephesus; whence Apollos, an Alexandrian, had been sent to Corinth; but is opposed by Demetrius the silversmith and his mob; writes his first epistle to the Corinthians, if not also that to the Galatians, Ac.18.23-28; xix.; 1 Co.i.-xvi.; Ga.i.-vi. | 4326 | 323 | The church began to enjoy a considerable calm of fifteen years, in which multitudes were converted to Christ, Re.vii.; 8.1. |
| | | | 4063 | 60 | Departs from Ephesus to Macedonia in Europe; collects a contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem. Informed of the good success of the former, writes his second epistle to the Corinthians, and perhaps the first to Timothy; comes to Corinth, whence he writes his epistle to the Romans, Ac.20.1-3; 2 Co.8.1,2,6,9; i.-xiii.; 1 Ti.i.-vi.; Ro.16.1; i.-xvi. | 4341 | 338 | After Constantine's death, by means of the partition of the empire into the Western and Eastern , and by the ravages of the Goths and other barbarians (especially after 395, till the Western empire was utterly abolished in A.D. 476, and the whole power of Rome extinguished about 566), the Roman empire was generally miserable. And in the same period, by the schism of the Donatists; by the heresies of the Arians, Pelagians, Nestorians, and Eutychians, and the contentions and persecutions attending the same; and by the gradual introduction of the Roman hierarchy and superstition, the church became more and more miserable, Re.8. 5-12; 12.13-17. |
| 4047 | 44 | Herod Agrippa murders James the apostle and brother of John, and imprisons Peter, who is liberated by an angel. When Herod had just displayed his pride, and accepted blasphemous flattery, he is smitten by an angel, and eaten up of worms, Ac.xii. | 4064 | 61 | Paul purposes to sail directly to Syria with the collection; but being informed that the Jews laid wait for his life, he travels through part of Europe and Lesser Asia; earnestly exhorts the elders of Ephesus to faithfulness and diligence in their office; arrives at Jerusalem; is apprehended in the temple; claims the privilege of a Roman and escapes scourging; pleads his cause before the Sanhedrim. To prevent his assassination by the Jews, Lysias the Roman captain sends him to Felix the governor of Judea at Cesarea; who, though he trembled at his discourse, kept him prisoner two full years, Ac.xx.-xxiv. | 4483 | 480 | By this time ten toes, horns , or kingdoms were formed out of the Roman empire, which, though often altered in their particular extent or form of government, have ever since continued, and have for the most part been subject to the power of the POPE, Da.2.41,42; 7.7,20,24; Re. 12.3; 13.1; 17.3; 10.12. |
| 4048 | 45 | Having delivered the collection, Barnabas and Saul return from Jerusalem to Antioch along with John Mark. By the direction of the Holy Ghost they are separated to preach to the Gentiles. They preach in Cyprus, where Elymas the sorcerer is struck blind, and Sergius the Roman governor is converted; and in Pamphylia, at Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, and all places in Lesser Asia, &c.; and in all meet with opposition, Ac.xiii.xiv. | 4066 | 63 | Paul is pannelled before Festus the new governor; appeals to Cæsar; pleads his cause before Festus and Agrippa. After a dangerous passage and shipwreck on the isle of Malta, he arrives at Rome, where he is continued a prisoner at large for two years, Ac.xxv.-xxviii., and writes his epistles to the Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians, and Hebrews, Phi.i.-iv.; Col.i.-iv.; Eph.i.-vi.; He. i.-xiii. | 4609 | 606 | The Roman state, which had been long forming by the gradual corruption of the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of the Christian church, arrived at its perfect form, the Bishop of Rome being constituted her UNIVERSAL HEAD; who has ever since generally ruled over most part of the Roman empire in the West, Da.7.8,24-26; 11.36-39; 2 Th.2.3-12; 1 Ti.4.1-3; 2 Ti.3.1-9; 4.3,4; Re.9.1-11; xiii.xvii. Meanwhile the Mahometan delusion was introduced into the East, and furiously propagated far and wide by fire and sword. It still continues established in the extensive empires of Indostan, Persia, Turkey, and Morocco, Re.9. 1-11; Da.11.40. |
| 4052 or 4055 | 49 or 52 | Some Jewish preachers insisting that the Gentile converts ought to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, the dispute is referred to a synod of apostles and elders at Jerusalem, whose determination being given, is dispersed among the churches, to their great joy, Ac.15.1-35; 16.4,5. Peter coming down to Antioch, sinfully dissembles, and is rebuked by Paul, Ga. 2.11-21. Paul with Silas, and Barnabas with John Mark, separate, and visit the churches which they had lately planted, Ac.15.36-41. Paul, Silas, and Timothy travel through much of Lesser Asia. Directed by a vision, Paul crosses the Mediterranean Sea into Macedonia in Europe; preaches at Philippi, where Lydia is converted and the devil dislodged from a sorceress, on which account they are cast into prison, but quickly liberated, and the jailer converted, Ac.xvi. | 4068 | 65 | About the end of this year he is set at liberty; preaches in Crete, and leaves Titus to set things in order; perhaps preaches in Spain. | 4759 | 756 | A hundred and fifty years, or five months after their rise, and 666 years after John received his Revelations, and about seventy years after a most dreadful pestilence in Asia and Europe, the popes became civil lords in Italy, and gradually extended their civil power over all the ten kingdoms of their subjects, and claimed it over all the earth. At the same time the Mahometan delusion and Saracenic empire were at their highest summit of power, Da.7.8,24; 11.37,40; 2 Th.2.4; Re. 13.2,12. |
| 4056 | 53 | They plant churches at Thessalonica and Berea; Paul preaches at Athens; proceeds to Corinth, whence he writes his epistles to the Thessalonians, and perhaps that to | 4069 | 66 | From Rome he writes his epistle to Titus, and at least the second to Timothy. About this time Nero begins the first imperial persecution of the Christians after the gospel had, for more than thirty years, been spreading and taking deep root in the empire. About this time James, Peter, and Jude wrote their epistles to the dispersed Hebrews. | 4803 | 800 | The German empire is founded by Charlet the Great, Re.13.3,14,15. |
| 4057 | 54 | They plant churches at Thessalonica and Berea; Paul preaches at Athens; proceeds to Corinth, whence he writes his epistles to the Thessalonians, and perhaps that to | 4077 | 70 | Jerusalem utterly laid waste by the Romans, and the Jewish nation destroyed in the most miserable manner. This, together with the disasters which followed under Trajan about A.D. 116, and under Adrian about 134 or 136, plainly marked God's abolition of the Levitical ceremonies, as none of the principal ones could be any more observed; and so weaned the Christians from their attachment to them, Mat.8.11,12; 23.34-39; Lu.29.42-44; 21.20-26, &c. | 5058 | 1055 | After pouring themselves south-westward into Persia for several ages, the Seljukian Turks about this time formed the four kingdoms of Bagdad, Iconium, Aleppo, and Damascus, near the Euphrates; but, by their own contentions, by the Tartar |

| invasions, and by the war of the European crusades, their power was restrained for 200 years, Re.9.14. | | And now, in the year of our Lord 1896, we see the Turkish empire tottering to its fall. Under the instigation and direction of the Sultan, the Ottoman Turk has been permitted to fill and, if possible, exhaust the measure of diabolical crime. There is throughout Christendom a general expectation of the utter dismemberment of the Sultan's dominions. During the twentieth century we may expect such a revival of truth and righteousness and love, as they are expressed through Jesus Christ, as has never been witnessed on this earth before. Enough has been accomplished through the gospel of Jesus Christ already to bring to the hearts of men renewed conviction of the truth of Isaiah's prophecy: "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow | | out of his roots. And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of council and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord. * * * The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together: and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Is. xi. ; 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9. | |

TABLES OF THE MEASURES, WEIGHTS, MONIES, AND TIMES, MENTIONED IN SCRIPTURE;

WITH AN APPENDIX, CONTAINING THE METHOD OF CALCULATING SCRIPTURAL MEASURES OF SURFACE.

A MEASURE is a known quantity applied to another of the same kind that is less known, to make its dimensions better known, by help of numbers expressing the proportion that the known quantity bears to the unknown. The dimensions to be measured are three: 1. Mere length, which hath but one dimension. 2. Surface, which consists of lengths multiplied into breadth; so it hath two dimensions, as it were, interwoven; and this is always measured by some square surface already known, as by a square foot or a square cubit, or any other square already known by help of its side. Moses generally useth the square cubit. 3. Solidity or capacity, which hath three dimensions multiplied into each other—length, breadth, and height or depth. This is measured by a known cube. From solidity ariseth weight in all sublunary bodies; and by weight we measure the value of coins. Therefore I shall join weights and coins together in the fourth table.

I use = to signify equal; :: to express proportion; . is called separatrix, parting decimals from integers.

TABLE I.—MEASURES OF LENGTH.

I express the cubit and its parts both by inch measure and by foot measure, which I deduce from inches by this proportion:—

| | In. Meas. | Ft. Meas. |
|--|-----------|-----------|
| As 12 . 1 . :: 21.888 | 1.824 | |
| | In. Dec. | Ft. Dec. |
| A Cubit is = to | 21.888 | 1.824 |
| A Span the Longer = half a cubit = to | 10.944 | .912 |
| Span the Less = one-third of a cubit = to | 7.296 | .608 |
| A Hand's breadth = one-sixth of a cubit = to | 3.648 | .304 |
| Finger's breadth = one-twenty-fourth of a cubit = to | .912 | .076 |

Measures of many cubits length I express only in foot-measure:—

| | Ft. Dec. |
|---|--------------|
| A Fathom . . . = 4 Cubits . . . | 7.296 |
| Ezekiel's Reed . . . = 6 Cubits . . . | 10.944 |
| Schenus, the Egyptian line for land-measure, which, I think, Scripture useth to divide inheritances (Ps. 16. 6 and 77. 55). They used different lengths, but the shortest and most useful was | .80 = 145.92 |

Herodotus mentions a schenus just 300 times as long. I judge that all the greater were made in proportion to the least.

|--|----------------------------|
| The Mile | = 4000 cubits = 7296 feet. |
| Stadium, one-tenth of their mile | = 400 cubits = 729.6 |
| Parasang, three of their miles = 1200 cubits = 4 English miles and 580 feet. | |
| Five Stadia, or two thousand cubits, made a Sabbath-day's journey | |
| Ten Stadia, or four thousand cubits, made an Eastern mile. | |

Twenty-four Eastern miles or ninety six thousand cubits, equal to thirty-three miles, one hundred and seventy two paces, four feet English, made a day's journey.

TABLE II.—MEASURES OF SURFACE.

Moses hath described these by square cubits. I here express them reduced to our square feet. The method of this reduction is taught in an Appendix. I first propose three clear examples given by Moses; secondly, I place six instances of greater difficulty.

The clearest examples are—

I. The Altar of Incense. Only two sides of it, viz. its length and breadth, are expressed by Moses; each of them is affirmed to be one cubit. Yet he declares that it was four-square; whence we collect that it was just one square cubit (see Ex. 30. 2). Now it is demonstrated in the Appendix that one Jewish square cubit amounts to in surface 3 English square feet and about 47 square inches.

II. The Table of Showbread (Ex. 25. 23). It is affirmed to be two cubits in length and one in breadth. None doubt but it was rectangular, containing two Jewish square cubits. These amount to above 6 English square feet and above a half, viz. 94 square inches.

III. The Boards of the Tabernacle, each ten cubits in length and one and a half in breadth (Ex. 26. 16), being rectangular, must contain 15 Jewish square cubits. These are proved to contain very near 50 square feet of English measure.

The more difficult cases reserved to the Appendix are—

I. The Mercy-seat, whose surface is = 12 square feet and a half.

II. A general method is taught of reducing any given number of Jewish cubits to English square feet.

III. The example of the 15 square cubits in the boards of the tabernacle is made clearer.

IV. The Court of the Tabernacle (described Ex. 27. 18) is found to be just half the Egyptian aroura, and to contain 1 rood 21 perches 27 square feet, &c.

V. The whole aroura is determined and reduced to our English measure, 3 roods 2 perches 55 square feet.

VI. The suburbs or glebe-land given to each city of the Levites (Nu. 35. 3-5), is showed to be a square, on each of the four sides of every city, containing a million of Jewish square cubits, or 100 aroura, which amount to in each square 76 acres 1 rood 20 perches 80 square feet; whence we collect that all the four-squares amounted to 305 acres 2 roods 1 perch, beside 51 feet square.

TABLE III.—MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

| | Wine gal. | Pinta. | Sol in |
|---|-----------|--------|--------|
| Epha or Bath , . . . | 7 | 4 | 15 |
| Chomer (Howar in our translation), . . . | 75 | 5 | 7 |
| Seah , one-third of an epha, . . . | 2 | 4 | 3 |
| Hin = one-sixth of an epha, . . . | 1 | 2 | 1 |
| Omer , one-tenth of an epha, . . . | 0 | 6 | 0.5 |
| Cab , one-eighth of an epha, . . . | 0 | 3 | 10 |
| Log , one-seventh-second of an epha, . . . | 0 | 0.5 | 10 |
| Measures of Syria (Jn. 2. 6) = Cong. Rom. . . . | 0 | 7.5 | 0 |
| Cotyla (Eastern), one-hundredth of an epha, . . . | 0 | 0.5 | 3 |

This cotyla contains just ten ounces avoirdupois of rain-water; omer, 100; epha, 1000; chomer, 10,000. So by these weights all these measures of capacity may be expeditiously recovered very near exactness.

TABLE IV.—OF WEIGHTS AND COINS.

The Jewish weights are reduced to the standard grains of our Troy weight, whereof 438 are equal to the Roman ounce, and to our ancient English avoirdupois ounce. The value of Jewish and Roman weights and coins, at the present rate of silver and gold, expressed in pence and decimals of a penny.

TABLE V.—OF TIMES.

The Jewish hours were introduced about the time of their captivity in Babylon. Their ordinary ones were of the same length as ours. Their day, beginning at six o'clock in the morning, they divided into twelve hours; of which our nine o'clock in the morning was the third, our noon their sixth, our three o'clock afternoon their ninth, and our five o'clock their eleventh. But they seem also to have at last divided their day into four great hours or watches, each containing three of the ordinary ones, and of these their third hour was from noon to three o'clock. Their night they divided into four watches, each consisting of three hours; the first ended about nine o'clock, the second at midnight, the third at three o'clock or cock-crowing, and the fourth about six o'clock in the morning. Their WEEK, copied from God's example in the creation of the world, began on our Sabbath, and ended on Saturday. Their MONTHS were regulated by the changes of the moon; and each third year consisted of thirteen of these months or moons. Their names were—

| | | | |
|------------------|-----------|----------------------|-----------|
| 1. Abib or Nisan | March | 7. Ethanum or Tizri | September |
| 2. Zif or Jair | April | 8. Bul or Marchesuan | October |
| 3. Sivan | May | 9. Chisleu | November |
| 4. Thamuz | June | 10. Thebeth | December |
| 5. Ab | July | 11. Shebeth | January |
| 6. Elul | August | 12. Adar | February |
| | September | 13. Veader | March |

Their CIVIL YEAR, originating from the creation of the world, began with Ethanum or Tizri, in our September; and by it their releases and jubilees were regulated. Their SACRED YEAR, originating from their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage (Ex.xii.), began with Abib or Nisan, in our March.

AN APPENDIX

To the Second Table of Measures of Surface described by Moses, showing the Method of reducing them by calculations to the measures used in England, for the benefit of those that understand Decimal Arithmetic and desire to try the Reductions given in the Table, or to make further improvements in this kind of measures.

I.—THE MERCY-SEAT.

I shall begin with reduction of the measures of the mercy-seat, which was God's throne of grace among the Jews. Moses, in Ex.25.17, affirms that its length was two cubits and a half, its breadth one cubit and a half. The fractions adhering to its length and breadth make some difficulty to beginners in arithmetic, which the decimal way doth much abate. Supposing, therefore, what I have elsewhere proved, that the Jewish cubit was a foot-measure 1.824, the length must be expressed in foot-measure and decimals thereof, 4.560. The breadth in like measure will be 2.736. Wherefore the product of these numbers multiplied into each other gives its surface 12.47616; in number of its square feet and decimals thereof, 12 square feet and very near half a square foot. If the decimals had been 50, it had just been half a foot. If we desire to express those decimals of a foot in square inches, as is usual in England, we must multiply .47616 by 144, the square inches of a foot, and the product will be 68.56704, which shows that the decimals we found amount to 68 square inches and about half an inch more: we need not be nicer.

II.—A SQUARE CUBIT REDUCED TO OUR MEASURE.

2. In the altar of incense Moses describes the Jewish square cubit, which must be reduced to our foot-measure thus— 1.824×1.824 . The product of these numbers multiplied will be the upper surface of this altar, 3.326976, that is, 3 square feet and .326976 decimals of a square foot, which we may express by 47 square inches and a few decimals of an inch square, inconsiderable.

III.—THE BOARDS OF THE TABERNACLE.

3. Moses' description of the boards of the tabernacle (Ex. 26. 16), by ten cubits in length and one and a half in breadth, naturally leads a man to discern in each board's surface 15 Jewish square cubits; because if we conceive a line drawn from the end of one cubit at the bottom of the board to the end of one cubit at the top of the board, this must needs be 10 whole square cubits on one side of that line, and ten half square cubits (= to 5 whole) on the other side of that line; here, therefore, are 15 square cubits. The reduction of these into English square feet is performed by multiplying 15, viz. the number of cubits given, into 3.326976, the feet and decimals of one square cubit, and the product will be 49.90464, and that is very near to 50 square feet; for those decimals amount to above 130 square inches, and a little more than 13 square inches would make it just 50 feet, which abatement we need not here regard.

IV.—THE COURT OF THE TABERNACLE.

4. Let us now go to the measure of the surface of land. But we will begin with the court of the tabernacle, the ground on which the priests performed all the solemn public worship of Israel in Moses' time. The area of this court is described by Moses (Ex.27.18), by its length, 100 cubits, and its breadth everywhere 50 cubits. Wherefore this area must be in Jewish measure 5000 square cubits, for that is the product of 100 multiplied into 50. To reduce these 5000 Jewish cubits into English square feet, I must multiply 5000 into 3.326976; the product is 16,634.88 English square feet.

But in cases of such long numbers of feet, we use, for brevity's sake and to help our memories, to reduce them into perches, or roods, or acres, which contain known numbers of square feet. A perch contains 272 square feet and one-fourth; a rood is—to 10,890 square feet; an acre is—to 43,560 square feet. It is plain that the number 16,634.88 hath not integers equal to those of an acre, but it hath enough to answer those in a rood, and some overplus; therefore I must divide 16,634.88 by 10,890, which is a rood. By such division continued in the decimal way until I have a fraction of five or six places, which is exact enough, I find the quotient to be 1.527537, which assures me that my number 16,634.88 hath but once entirely in it a whole rood, but it hath moreover in it many decimal parts of a rood. These therefore I reduce to the perches contained in them by multiplying them into 40, which is the number of perches that make up a rood, and cutting off six places from the product, which is 21.101480; so I find there are 21 perches entire, and the figures after the separatrix are decimals of a perch. These also I multiply by 272.25, which are the square feet and decimals of a perch. The product of this last multiplication, after eight places cut off from it by the separatrix, because there were six places of decimals in one of the multipliers, and two in the other, is 27.62793000. Hence I learn that there are therein but 27 entire feet; all the eight decimal places amount to little above half a foot, and therefore I cast them away as inconsiderable in the measure of land. This method of reduction by multiplication of decimals I find to be easier than the common way of reduction by division, and therefore I propose it to be used by beginners in this practice of surveying. So I find this court to contain in English measure 1 rood 21 perches 27 feet, and little more than half a foot square. But reflecting upon Moses' measure by cubits, and finding them to be precisely 5000 square cubits, I observed that they were just half 10,000, which I had observed from Herodotus' Euterpe to be the area of the Egyptian aroura, by which their land was as generally measured as ours is by acres and roods. (See Herodot. l. 2., c. 168.) I called also to mind a passage in Manetho, an Egyptian priest, cited by Josephus in his first book Against Apion, where he affirms that Manetho, in his history of the reign, wars, and expulsion of the Pastors (whom Africanus affirms to be Phenicians or Canaanites, and Josephus vainly believed to be Jews), wrote out of the public records of Egypt that these Pastors made at Abaris a very large and strong encampment that encompassed 10,000 arouræ, sufficient to contain 240,000 men, and long enough to maintain their cattle. Hence it appears that not only the Egyptians, but the Phenicians or Canaanites also, that had dwelt among them and had reigned there during the time of six kings successively, used this measure of land called aroura. Now this was long before Moses' time: for the beginning of Amosis or Tethmosis, who expelled them out of Egypt, was very near the time of Abraham's death, as appears by the annals of the learned primate of Ireland. Wherefore I believe that Moses, who was skilled in all Egyptian learning, especially surveying, did of choice make the court of the tabernacle to be just half an aroura, which was a known measure to him and his people, who had long dwelt in Egypt; and divine authority directed him so to do.

V.—THE REDUCTION OF AN AROURA TO ENGLISH MEASURE.

5. Because we have shown from Herodotus that an aroura is the square of 100 Jewish or Egyptian cubits; and 100 such cubits may, in English foot-measure, be expressed by 182.4 English feet, it follows that the square of this number will express exactly the number of the English square feet that are contained in an aroura. Now, by multiplication of 182.4 into itself, I find the product to be 33,269.76; therefore I conclude that there are 33,269 square feet entire, and .76 decimals of a square foot in an aroura. Now, to reduce these English square feet into roods, perches, and the remainder of square feet, I use the method used in the last paragraph. First, I divide them by 10,890, the square feet in a rood, and the quotient I find 3.055074—that is, 3 roods and .055074 decimals of a rood. Secondly, I multiply these decimals by 40, which is the number of perches in a rood; the product is 2.202960: hence I conclude there are therein 2 perches and .292960 decimals of a perch. Thirdly, I multiply these last decimals by 272.25, which are the square feet of a perch; the product is 55.25586000—that is, 55 entire square feet. The eight places of decimals amount to little above one-fourth of a square foot; therefore I reject them as inconsiderable in measure of land. By all these reductions it is found that an aroura is in English measure 3 roods 3 perches 55½ square feet. Hence it follows also that it is not well translated by jugerum, for it is much larger; nor is it well in English called an acre, for it is considerably less. To this place I refer the use of the lesser sort of Σχοῖνος, which yet is most convenient for the use of the Egyptians and of the Jews to measure out private men's inheritances, by a line which was 80 cubits long. For the length of this line will measure one side of an aroura, if the other side be 125 cubits long, which is the length of this line and its half, and 5 cubits above half of it, which they might easily mark in it by a knot or ring; and by this means they might easily lay any number of arouræ together, all of them rectangular and parallel to each other. Such lines, I suppose, for measure of inheritances, are intimated Ps.78.55 and 16.6, &c.

VI.—THE LEVITES' GLEEBE.

6. I shall conclude with an example, amounting, after reduction, to a number of English acres, which measure we have not yet reached to. This I take from Nu.35.3-5. There Moses describes what measure of land the Levites were to be allowed for their cattle, their goods, and all their beasts, on the north-east, south, and west sides of each of their cities; so that the city was to be in the midst of the land belonging to it. This land in our translation is called suburbs, because of its nearness to all their cities. But we must not thence imagine that it means houses and streets adjoining to their cities, in which sense we sometimes use the word suburbs; for Moses plainly tells us they were places for their several sorts of cattle to feed in, such as might also be orchards or gardens for fruits, or perhaps for a little corn, comprehended in the word, their goods. These fields he limits by 1000 cubits, which was just a quarter of an eastern mile, but amounts in mere length to 608 yards English measure, and therefore exceeds a quarter of an English mile by 168 yards in length. But it is certain that cattle cannot feed upon mere length, but this must signify the side of some surface of land bounded thereby; and we must have two sides of some surface given before we can find the area of surface contained

Therefore Moses (ver. 5) tells us that on each side of each city they must measure 2000 cubits, which will determine no surface, unless we understand it to mean the two sides of a square bounded on every side by 1000 cubits. These two sides multiplied into each other will produce a square that contains just a million of square cubits, and that is a known and exact measure of just 100 arourae. And this shows that the 2000 cubits mentioned (ver. 5) are the two sides of that square, whereof the 1000 mentioned (ver. 4.) is one, and may be called the root of the square. This shows the agreement of the two different numbers. The reduction of this million of square cubits will be performed by the same method that I have used before. Therefore, first, I express 1000 Jewish by 1824 English feet, without any separatrix, according to the principles owned in decimal arithmetic; and the square of that number will be 3,326,976 without a separatrix. Secondly, I divide this number by 43,560, which are the square feet of an acre, and find the quotient to be 76.376859, which signify 76 entire acres and .376859 decimals of an acre. Thirdly, to find what roods are contained in these decimals, I multiply them by 4, the number of roods in an acre, and find the quotient to be 1.507436, which proves that there is but one rood in them, and the six figures cut off by the separatrix (because there were six decimals in one of the multipliers) are all decimals of a rood. Fourthly, therefore, to find what perches are in these last decimals, I multiply them by 40, which is the number of perches contained in a rood. The product is 20.297440; hereby I find that there are 20 entire perches, besides the decimals of a perch, placed after the separatrix. Fifthly, to find what square feet are in those last decimals, I multiply them by 272.25, which are the square feet and decimals in a perch; the product is 80.97804, which is 80 square feet; and all the decimals not amounting to a square foot I reject as inconsiderable in measure of land. Thus we have found that this and every other square on each side of every Levitical city was prescribed to be 76 acres 1 rood 20 perches 80 square feet in our measure, but was just a million of square cubits in their measure.

To add the four squares belonging to one Levitical city together, the best way would be to take the first quotient that we found in acre measure, viz. 76.376859, and we must multiply it by 4; and we shall find, by the method I have used, all the four squares together to amount to 305 acres 2 roods 1 perch; we need not take notice of any lesser quantities in this case. We may also by this method find the sum of the acres belonging to all the forty-eight cities of the Levites, and many other improvements in this kind of measuring surfaces.

A TABLE OF OFFICES AND CONDITIONS OF MEN.

Patriarchs, or fathers of families, such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and his sons.

Judges, temporary supreme governors, immediately appointed by God over the children of Israel.

Kings, and they either of the whole nation, or after the falling off of the ten tribes, of Judah or Israel.

Elders, senators, the LXX. or Sanhedrim.

Officers, provosts, sheriffs, or executioners.

Judges, inferior rulers, such as determine controversies in particular cities.

Israelites, Hebrews, descendants from Jacob.

An Hebrew of the Hebrews, an Israelite by original extraction.

A Proselyte of the Covenant, who was circumcised, and submitted to the whole law.

A Proselyte of the Gate, or stranger, who worshipped one God, but remained uncircumcised.

OFFICERS UNDER THE ASSYRIAN OR PERSIAN MONARCHS.

Tirshatha, or governor, appointed by the kings of Assyria or Persia.

Heads of the Captivity, the chief of each tribe or family, who exercised a precarious government during the captivity.

UNDER THE GRECIAN MONARCHS, SUPERIOR OFFICERS.

Maccabees, the successors of Judas Maccabeus, high-priests who presided with kingly power.

UNDER THE ROMAN EMPERORS.

Presidents, or governors, sent from Rome with imperial power.

Tetrarchs, who had kingly power in four provinces.

Proconsuls, or deputies of provinces.

INFERIOR OFFICERS.

Publicans, or tax-gatherers.

Centurions, captains of a hundred men.

ECCLESIASTICAL OFFICERS, OR SECTS OF MEN.

High-priests, who only might enter the holy of holies.

Second-priests or Sagan, who supplied the high-priest's office in case he were disabled.

High-priests for the War, set apart for the occasion of an expedition.

Priests, Levites of the sons of Aaron, divided into twenty-four ranks, each rank serving weekly in the temple.

Levites, of the tribe of Levi, but not of Aaron's family; of these were three orders—Gershonites, Kohathites, Merarites, several sons of Levi.

Nethinims, inferior servants to the priests and Levites (not of their tribe), to draw water and cleave wood, &c.

Prophets, anciently called seers, who foretold future events and denounced God's judgments.

Children of the Prophets, their disciples or scholars.

Wise Men, called so in imitation of the eastern magi or Gentile philosophers.

Scribes, writers and expounders of the law.

Disputers, that raised and determined questions out of the law.

Rabbies or Doctors, teachers of Israel.

Libertines, freed-men of Rome, who, being Jews or proselytes, had a synagogue or oratory for themselves.

Gaulonites or Galileans, who pretended it unlawful to obey a heathen magistrate.

Herodians, who shaped their religion to the times, and particularly flattered Herod.

Epicureans, who placed all happiness in pleasure.

Stoics, who denied the liberty of the will, and pretended all events were determined by fatal necessity.

Simon Magus, author of the heresy of the Gnostics, who taught that men, however vicious their practice was, should be saved by their knowledge.

Nicolaitans, the disciples of Nicolas, one of the first seven deacons, who taught the community of wives.

Nazarites, who under a vow abstained from wine.

Nazarenes, Jews professing Christianity.

Zelotes, Sicarii, or murderers, who, under pretence of the law, thought themselves authorized to commit any outrage.

Pharisees, separatists, who, upon the opinion of their own godliness, despised all others.

Sadducees, who denied the resurrection of the dead, angels, and spirits.

Samaritans, mongrel professors, partly heathens and partly Jews, the offspring of the Assyrians sent to Samaria.

Apostles, missionaries, or persons sent; they who were sent by our Saviour, from their number, were called The Twelve.

Bishops, successors of the apostles in the government of the church.

Deacons, officers chosen by the apostles to take care of the poor.

A COLLECTION OF THE PROPHECIES WHICH CONCERN THE CALLING OF THE JEWS, AND THE GLORY WHICH SHALL BE IN THE LATTER DAYS.

1. The Jews shall be gathered from all parts of the earth where they are now scattered, and brought home into their own land. For this, see Is. 11.11; 27.12, 13; 43.5, 6; 49.11, 12; 60.4.

Compare Je. 3.18; 16.14, 15; 23.3; 30.10; 31.7, 8, 10; 32.37.

So Ho. 11.10, 11; Zep. 3.10; Zec. 8.7, 8; 10.8-10.

2. They shall be carried by the Gentiles unto their place, who shall join themselves with the Jews, and become the Lord's people, Is. 49.22; 14.12; 60.9; 66.19, 20; 2.2-4.

Compare Je. 3.17; 16.19; Eze. 47.22, 23; Mi. 5.3; Zec. 2.11; 8.20-23.

3. Great miracles shall be wrought when Israel is restored, as formerly when they were brought out of Egypt, viz.:-

(1) Drying up the river Euphrates, Is. 11.15, 16; Zec. 10.11; Re. 16.12; Ho. 2.15; Mi. 7.15.

(2) Causing rivers to flow in desert places, Is. 41.17-19; 48.20, 21; 43.9, 20.

(3) Giving them prophets, Is. 66.18-21; Ho. 12.9, 10.

(4) The Lord Christ himself shall appear at the head of them, Is. 35.8; 52.12; 58.8; Ho. 1.10, 11; Mi. 2.12, 13.

4. The Jews, being restored and converted to the faith of Christ, shall be formed into a state, and have judges and counsellors over them as formerly: the Lord Christ himself being their king, who shall then also be acknowledged king over all the earth, Is. 1.26; 60.17. Compare Je. 23.4; 30.8, 9, 21; Ho. 3.5; Eze. 34.23, 24; 37.24, 25; Is. 54.5; Ob. 21; Zec. 14.5, 9; Ps. 22.27, 28.

5. They shall have the victory over all their enemies, and all kings and nations of the earth shall submit unto them. For which see Is. 11.13, 14; 41.14-16; 49.23; 60.12, 25;

10-12; Joel 3.7, 8, 19, 20; Ob. 17, 18; Mi. 4.6-8, 11-13; 5.5-7; 7.16, 17; Zec. 2.13; 9.13-15; 10.5, 6; 12.6; Nu. 24.17; Is. 49.23; 60.10-16; 66.19, 20.

6. The Jews restored shall live peaceably, without being divided into two nations, or contending with one another any more, Is. 11.13, 14; 14.1, 2; Je. 3.18; 50.4; Eze. 37.21, 22; Ho. 1.11.

CHRIST AND HIS KINGDOM IN SHADOWS;

OR,

THE CHRISTIAN DISPENSATION,

AS TYPIFIED IN

THE OLD TESTAMENT,

AND ESPECIALLY IN THE

MOSAIC RITES AND CEREMONIES.

BY

REV. CHARLES P. KRAUTH, D. D., LL. D.,

VICE-PROVOST OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND NORTON PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY IN THE LUTHERAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, PHILADELPHIA; AUTHOR OF "THE CONSERVATIVE REFORMATION AND ITS THEOLOGY," "BERKELEY'S PRINCIPLES, WITH PROLEGOMENA AND ANNOTATIONS," ETC., ETC., ETC.

TYPES IN GENERAL;

THEIR ORIGIN AND SCOPE.

As all things lie naked and open before God, as His thought is eternal, as He is One, there is a unity in His whole scheme, there is one grand idea harmonizing the minutest details of His plan—a plan which bridges over all time, as it reaches from eternity to eternity. As God has made the visible universe and controls all events with reference, ultimately, to spiritual beings and spiritual ends, it is natural that His thought and plan, so far as they are revealed in one era, should look to something in the times to come. Hence it is that in the realm of Nature, and yet more in God's peculiar Revelation of Himself in the Kingdom of Grace, there is a constant typical reproduction, a repetition of the Divine idea in new degrees of clearness, so that every present is an antitype of some past and a type of some future. Man, in nature, is the antitype of ages of premonition and promise. Nature herself is the type of Grace, and Grace, under the Old Dispensation, is the type of Grace under the new. "In the Divine works the least blade of grass reveals the most perfect symmetry; in God's words, even the most insignificant, there is the closest coherence." "The Bible is one Book—one grand thought, which embraces the infinite, divine whole in it, the thought which is the spring of the ages, the measure of all that is past and of all that is to come." "When a flower springs up, the spirit which is to shape it is already in the seed, and with every leaf that opens, that hidden something which is the reason of its shape is more and more revealed." "The whole Old Testament is one grand Prophecy, one grand type of that which was to come and has come."

SPECIAL MEANING OF THE WORD TYPE.

The word type is a Greek word in an English shape. It originally means anything produced by a blow—a print, a figure, shape, form, pattern, sample. The word type is used with various degrees of latitude. Sometimes it is employed in a sense sufficiently wide to comprehend every sort of figurative allusion which the ingenuity of the interpreter can trace in Holy Scripture. In its proper theological sense, a type is a person, a thing or an event, which either in whole or in part is divinely meant and appointed as the symbol of a person, a thing or an event not yet revealed. It is one reality hiding for a time another reality. It is a prophecy, but it is not put into language. The lamb is a symbol of Christ. The Paschal Lamb is a type of Christ in the natural, instinctive innocence and gentleness of every lamb, the mind can trace an analogy to the moral innocence and gentleness of our Lord. But the Paschal Lamb is divinely appointed, in part at least, for the very purpose of symbolizing the sacrifice made and the redemption wrought by Christ. We can apply the symbol of a lamb to any one who is innocent and gentle, but the type of the Paschal Lamb can be applied to our Saviour alone. We can call a little child a lamb, but we cannot call it a Paschal Lamb. We generally mark the antitype with the definite article. Thus we say Christ is the Paschal Lamb, the Atoning Sacrifice, the High Priest. A type, then, is a prophetic similitude, meant in God's mind and expressed in some other way than by words. It is a prophecy in things. It is the shadow of something coming, and, therefore, can be cast only by a substance: "Which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ." Col. ii. 17. "There are things done," says Augustine, "but prophetically done; they are on earth, but they are of heaven; they are through men, but they come from God."

INTERPRETATION OF TYPES.

Great care should be taken that we do not assume as types what are not types. Nothing is a type unless the Bible asserts or implies that it is, or unless it comes clearly within the scope of the same principles on which these assertions rest in other cases. The Bible settles all the principles, but it has not room for all the details. We are to get types out of the Bible, on Bible principles, not to put them into the Bible on our own. We are not to treat the types with an ill-regulated fancy which will make the Scriptures suffer for the fault of the expositor.

But it is also possible to err in the other extreme. We may mistake a rationalistic spirit of depreciation or a constitutional prosiness for sobriety of judgment. The imagination has its perils, but so has the lack of imagination. "Too sharp is dull," but dull is also dull. We must not run into the error of transfusing our own fancies into the divine record, but neither must we be insensible to the glorious richness of its poetry of symbol, allegory and type, in which there is not simply an expression of truth, but a transfiguration of it. The Bible is not only mind to mind, but is also heart to heart—God's mind and heart to ours. Nor for the space of a solitary word, are we to forget whose mind and heart we have to deal with in the Bible. That construction of the whole is most probable, all other things being equal, which is most consonant with the majesty, the depth, the omniscience, of the divine mind, the largeness, the tenderness, the pity, of the divine heart. The range of the interpreter is to be widened by the divine range, the divine range not to be narrowed by the meanness and barrenness of the expositor. There is a common guilt and a common curse to him who adds and to him who takes away. He who takes away, robs the hungry of bread; he who adds, puts husks or poison to the lips of the trusting.

But even in the sober development of undoubted types we should carefully distinguish between the points of comparison which are distinctly asserted in the Holy Scriptures themselves (and we mean here to embrace the Old Testament also, which has many elucidations of typical reference), and those which are mere inferences or conjectures of the interpreter, however able and plausible they may be. The one interpretation is infallible, the other is at best simply probable. In the divine application and explanation of types there is a characteristic economy and repression, while the general tendency of expositors has been toward profusion and extravagance.

THE MOSAIC TYPES.

"We have found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." "Had ye believed Moses ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me." "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." "All things which are written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms concerning me." All the books of Moses have by pre-eminence a direct connection with the person and work of Messiah; they are the fountain-head of prophecy. Moses is the germ of all the Prophets, as Christ is the germ of all the Apostles.

GENESIS records the Fall of Man, from which arose the necessity of sending a Redeemer; it shows the certainly and character of His coming in the promises made of God to the Patriarchs, and sets forth the example of their fate in a Saviour to come, and in the earliest history of the Church presents materials for the edification of the Church of Christ to the end of time. An old divine well said, that no better title could be given to Genesis than this: "Book of the Gospel touching the promises concerning Christ."

EXODUS, in the history of the liberation from Egypt, shadows the Deliverance wrought by Christ, his character as the true Paschal Lamb and the Bread which came from Heaven, and shows in type the nature of his Priesthood and Propitiatory Sacrifice.

The Key to LEVITICUS is given in the Epistle to the Hebrews, which shows that Christ and His Redemptory Work are veiled under the whole body of the types of the Ceremonial Law.

The BOOK OF NUMBERS adds to the treasures of typical theology the type of the Brazen Serpent, the Red Heifer and the Smitten Rock.

The BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY is the repetition and sealing of the Law and of the Promises concerning Christ.

DIVISION AND CLASSIFICATION OF THE MOSAIC TYPES.

With reference to time, the types may be classified as the Pre-Mosaic, the Mosaic and the Post-Mosaic. We confine ourselves here mainly to the second class. They have been arranged in the order suggested by Christ's Person and Office, His Priesthood, Sacrifice and Benefits. In a still more completely methodical way they have been arranged in the order of a complete system of divinity. HULSIUS arranges them as— I. Typical Sacraments: the Tree of Life; the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil; Circumcision; the Paschal Supper. II. Miracles: Noah's Ark; the Passage of the Red Sea; the Pillar of Cloud and Fire; the Manna; the Smitten Rock. III. Persons: Melchizedek; Jacob and Esau; Moses; the Priests; Levites (Nethinims; Nazarites; Rechabites; Prophets; Interpreters; Wise Men; Scribes; Disputers; Rabbis; Pharisees; Essenes; Sadducees; Herodians; Galileans; Samaritans; Publicans). IV. Sacrifices. V. Ablutions. VI. Instruments: the Ark of the Covenant; Altars; the Ephod. VII. Places: the Tabernacle; the Temple; Court of the Gentiles; High Places and Groves; Gates; Cities of Refuge (Synagogues and Schools). VIII. Festivals. IX. Visions. X. Enemies.

The most natural, most comprehensive and easily remembered division of the Mosaic types is that which classifies them by their associations and connections with—I. Sacred Places. II. Edifices. III. Structures. IV. Persons. V. Offices. VI. Things. VII. Acts. VIII. Times and Occasions. IX. Events; and this is the division we shall follow.

I. TYPES RELATED TO HOLY PLACES.

FROM its natural circumference to its divinely appointed centre, the Promised Land was considered holy. The sanctity intensified as it approached the centre, the holy passing into the more holy, the more holy into the most holy. The entire land was holy; Jerusalem was specially holy in the land; the temple was the holiest point in Jerusalem, and by various gradations within the temple, was reached the place within the veil; the holy of holies, the holiest of all.

1. THE HOLY LAND

Was given by God to His covenant people. It was to be the place of their rest. It was separate from all lands; it was little but glorious. It was a land flowing with milk and honey; rich in its products, land of the palm, the fig, the olive and the vine. It was wonderfully guarded and blessed. Covered with flocks and herds, with its waving forests and its fertile lowlands, watered by numerous streams and rivers, washed by the Midland Ocean of the Mediterranean and by inland seas, it once supported a population of twenty millions, with a thousand cities and towns. The Holy Land was a typical land in all these respects, and a source of numerous images of the New Testament Church on Earth, and yet more of that Church in its heavenly glory. The Israelite passes through the desert of the world to the peace of the Church, through the desert of life to the joy of heaven. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth," etc., Heb. xi. 13-16.

2. SALEM OR JERUSALEM.

Salem, "peace," has merged its name in Jerusalem, the hallowed city, which not alone the Jew and the Christian reverence, but which the Mohammedan calls "the place of the Sanctuary," "the Blessed Sanctity," "the Holy." Jerusalem is "the city of the great King," city of the Temple and of the Ark, devoted to God's glory, and the only place in which the full ritual of His worship could be observed. God had chosen it, that His name might be there. The fond old legendary faith of the Jew was that in Jerusalem no serpent or scorpion could hurt, no fever could burn, that nothing polluting was allowed to enter it, that no traces of the dead were left in it. "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God." It is a type of the Jerusalem which is above, the great, the holy city, the heavenly; the city of the living God, the free, the mother of us all, Gal. iv. 26; Heb. xii. 22, the New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from God prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, the name of which is written on Him that overcometh. Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10-27.

3. ZION OR SION,

In its widest sense, was the whole mountain range on which Jerusalem lay. In a more restricted sense it was the highest part of the range. It was the city of David, God's holy hill, the place of His choice, His desire, His founding and His dwelling, the place of sacred song and gladness, the point from which the law went forth. It was to Jerusalem as the soul is to the body. The glory of Jerusalem was that Zion was in it. It was the centre of the centre and heart of the heart. The whole land was counted its daughter. It was type of the Church of the New Testament, the Kingdom of the Messiah into which all nations were to be gathered. On Zion God has placed His Kingly Son. Ps. ii. 6. Zion is the habitation of the Lord. Ps. ix. 12. Help and the Redeemer comes from Zion. Ps. xiv. 7; Isa. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 26. God shines forth from it. Ps. 1. 2. In Zion the chief Corner-stone is laid, tried, elect, precious and sure. Isa. xxviii. 16; Rom. ix. 33; 1 Pet. ii. 6. To the daughter of Zion comes her King, meek and having salvation. Zech. ix. 9; Matt. xx. 5. As the Church on earth becomes the glorified Church in heaven, Zion is type of the celestial glory which shines in the city of our God. Heb. xii. 22. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is this Zion. This is Jehovah's rest for ever. On this Mount Sion stands this Lamb, and with Him stand the happy thousands on whose forehead His Father's name is written. The redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be on their head. They shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. Her priests shall be clothed with the spotless robes of salvation through a Saviour's righteousness, and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. Ps. xlviii. 2; cxxlii. 13, 14; Isa. li. 11; Rev. xiv. 1.

II. TYPICAL EDIFICES.

THE Tabernacle, with its various parts (Ex. xxvi., xxxvi.), was a Temple within a Tent, or a Tent whose chief part was a Temple. The Tabernacle proper was distinct from the Tent, as the interior from the exterior, the shrine from the Temple at large. Two terms are used in the original to mark the difference between the Tent and the Tabernacle in the stricter sense in which it was the dwelling-place of the Most High. See the passages in which the tent or covering is distinguished from the Tabernacle, as Ex. xxvi. 7, 12, 13; xxxv. 11, and in other places. Our Authorized Version ordinarily translates both these terms by Tabernacle. But one is the Tabernacle Tent, the other the Tent Tabernacle. The Tabernacle Tent is called the Tent or Tabernacle of the testimony or witness, and the Tabernacle of the congregation or assembly. The Tent-Tabernacle was the movable Sanctuary and palace of the King of Kings. The Tabernacle as moving, was an emblem of the Church in her militant and wandering state, yet as the abode of God it was a shadow of heaven where God shall tabernacle among his saints. Rev. xxi. 3. As the place of God's personal special indwelling and manifestation, it was the type of Christ, the Word who became flesh and tabernacled among us. 'John i. 14. Within the tent of His humanity was the Tabernacle-Shrine of His Deity.

The firm linkings of the Tabernacle are like the bonds of the saints; its Artificers, trained of God, are like faithful ministers; the men and women who gave to it, and worked for it, are like believers who conjoin their gifts and toils in building up the Church. The cloud and fire which covered the tabernacle are emblems of the divine protection by day and night; the excellence of the shittim wood, Ex. xxv. 5, 10, 13, 23, 28, its hardness and freedom from corruption point to the firmness and incorruptness that become saints who are the body of Christ.

In its fluctuation as a preparation for the fixedness of the Temple which followed it, it is like our earthly house of this Tabernacle, 2 Cor. v. 1-4, which we put off, 2 Pet. i. 14, that we may pass into the abiding house of our Father, the Temple not made with hands, and may in due time be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven—incorruption and immortality. But the Tabernacle itself was but a reduced copy of another typical temple. It was a miniature of the Universe, the great Temple of the Most High. The Outer Court of the Tabernacle corresponds with the natural World, the Holy Place with the Church, the Most Holy with Heaven. The whole Universe is but a revelation of God in various degrees. The lowest revelation is in Nature, the mediate is in His Word and in His Church, the supremest is in Heaven, and these three grades of revelation involve three grades of fellowship with God, the faintest through nature, the intermediate through grace, the most perfect in glory. But man himself is a miniature of the Universe, man is himself a Tabernacle, and LUTHER has traced in man the same triple idea. Man's body is the Outer Court, his soul, his powers of understanding and of knowledge is the Holy Place, his spirit is the Holy of Holies. "Man is the glory of God." See 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17.

THE PARTS AND DIVISIONS OF THE TABERNACLE.

The main parts and divisions of the Tabernacle were—

1. The Court (Ex. xxvii. 9-19; xxxviii. 9-31), the outer or great Court, the open space around the Tabernacle proper. We may call it the Tabernacle Tent.

2. The Holy Place (Ex. xxviii. 33, 34), or Sanctuary (Lev. iv. 6), the first or outer chamber of the Tabernacle proper (A), through which was the entrance into—

3. The Most Holy Place (Ex. xxviii. 33, 34), the Holiest of all (Heb. ix. 3), the inner apartment, which, in conjunction with the Holy Place, formed the Tabernacle proper, or Tent Tabernacle (B). They were separated (4) by a veil.

1. The Outer Court or Great Court was the Tabernacle Tent or open space in front of and at the sides of the Tabernacle. It was curtained in, and was open at the top. It contained the Brazen Laver for the ablution of the priests and the Brazen Altar for burnt offerings. In the permanent shape it took in the Temple it was divided into two parts separated by a wall. Within the wall was the Court of the Jews and of the Proselytes. Outside of the dividing wall, was the Court of the Gentiles. The Gentiles were forbidden under penalty of death to pass within the wall. In the Court within the wall our Lord and his Apostles taught; it was into this Paul was charged as having brought the Greeks. Acts xxi. 28. It was from the part outside of the wall, the Court of the Gentiles, that our Lord drove the traffickers and money-changers. Matt. xxi.; John iii. The Court of the Gentiles typified the vocation of the nation into the Church of our Lord. They who had beheld expectant, found that in Christ the dividing wall was broken down; "in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek," Gal. iii. 28. They "who sometimes were afar off are made nigh. He is our peace who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us." Eph. ii. 11-19.

2. The Holy Place was the outer apartment or chamber of the Tabernacle proper. None but the priests were allowed to enter it. In the morning it was entered to offer incense on the altar which stood there, and to extinguish the lamps of the golden candlestick, which were lighted again in the evening. On the Sabbath the shew-bread was changed.

3. The Most Holy or Holiest, the Holy of Holies or Oracle, was a type of the heavenly sanctuary, the central point of God's revelation of himself, the place of the immediate presence of the manifested Jehovah. Within the Most Holy was the Ark of the Covenant, which was the Propitiatory or Mercy Seat overshadowed by the Cherubim. The High Priest alone entered it, and to him it was allowed to enter only on the day of Atonement, which came but once a year.

The Jewish Talmudists and Rabbins held that the "Tabernacle was meant to be a book of deeper wisdom, and of something more glorious than itself, and hence shadowed heavenly and eternal things." A common opinion among the Jews is that the three parts of the Tabernacle signify the three parts of the Universe. The Court open to the elements signifies the world, in which men of all classes come together. The Holy Place represents the starry heavens. The Most Holy Place is Heaven where God sits enthroned among the angels, of whom, by pre-eminence, the Cherubim are figures.

4. The Veil separated the Holy of Holies from the Holy Place, "the Holy Ghost this signifying that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first Tabernacle was yet standing." Heb. ix. 8. When our Lord yielded up the ghost, "the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom." Matt. xxvii. 51. In this act was implied that the Father had accepted the sacrifice of His Son as finished and perfect. The Type had vanished in the Antitype; the true High-Priest had superseded the shadow; the real Veil, the Flesh of Christ, had been rent; the true Atoning Blood had been sprinkled; the new and living Way opened by which, not alone from the Holy Place but from the outer Court, all might have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. The Typical mysteries had vanished. Jew and Gentile are one—the moral Universe has uninterrupted access to the throne and heart of God.

III. TYPICAL STRUCTURES,

OR DURABLE PARTS OF THE FURNISHING OF THE TYPICAL EDIFICES.

THE ALTARS. There were two altars in the Tabernacle. 1. The first was the Brazen Altar, the Altar of Burnt Offering. It stood within the Court, the first great object facing the entrance. In passing from the beginning to the end of the Tabernacle, the order would be—first, the great and only Altar for Atoning Sacrifice; second, the Laver for washing; third, the Holy Place with the light of its Golden Candlestick on one side, the food of its Shew-Bread on the other, the Priest at its Altar of Incense, between, but advanced toward the Veil, then, within the Veil, the Type of Heaven itself. The great Altar stood under the open heavens, accessible to all. The fire for its sacrifice had fallen direct from God, and was never allowed to go out.

Is there not a system of theology in this order? First, is the Atoning Sacrifice of an all-sufficient Saviour, which gives character and efficacy to all else. It is open as the heavens, and free to all. God has accepted it. Its efficacy changes not. In the arrangement of the application and results of His Sacrifice, we have first the Laver of Holy Baptism and of Regeneration, the Illumination of the Holy Spirit, and the nourishment with the Flesh of our Lord which is the Bread from Heaven, and then the Thanksgiving into which all the life of the Christian rises,—until at last he enters within the Heavenly Veil, into which the Great Fore-Runner has passed before him.

2. The Second or Golden Altar, stood in the Holy Place centrally, before the Veil, so that at the parting of the Veil it seemed to be common to both the Holy Place and the Most Holy, Heb. ix. 4. No sacrifices were offered on it. But once in a year, on the Great Day of Atonement, ment, the High Priest sprinkled on the horns of it the blood of the sin-offering. Ex. xxx. 10. Every morning and night incense was burned on it.

The Great Altar represents Christ in his Atoning Sacrifice, the Golden Altar represents Him in His Intercessory character. The sweet Incense which arose in a cloud to cover the Mercy-Seat typified the Prayers of all saints accepted through Him, and the worship which in every place is to be offered by Him to Jehovah's name, Mal. i. 11; Rev. viii. 3. Christ is at once Priest, Sacrifice and Altar. There was but one Altar for the whole Burnt-Offering, as there is but one Propitiatory Sacrifice for the race through all time. On this Altar were laid the gifts of God's people. The Altar sanctified their gifts, as Christ sanctifies ours. All the vessels of the Altar typified the application and method of receiving the benefits purchased for us by Christ. The Horns of the Altar show that it was to be clung to, as well as fled to; the penitent fear is to be followed by the believing trust.

3. The Brazen Laver stood between the Altar of Atonement and the entrance to the Holy Place. In its pure waters the Priests were to wash away their pollutions, under penalty of death for neglect. It typified the need of the Washing of Regeneration, the Laver of a true Baptism, the Sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit, the purchase and necessary sequence of the Sacrifice of Christ. The Laver was constructed of what had been mirrors, Ex. xxxviii. 8. The mirror could reflect, and thus make its holder more perfectly aware of the impurities he had contracted on his face and vestments, and thus could prepare him for the more effectual application of the cleansing. The Laver, with its burnished surface, may have become one vast mirror, a mirror of mirrors, which may have helped to point out to him who approached any lack of conformity with the external demands of the law. So he who comes to the cleansing must know himself, and act up to that knowledge, James i. 23, 25.

Though we be Priests of one God, and in His service, we must at each approach seek a re-application of the blood of cleansing. "I will wash my hands in innocence; so will I compass thine altar, O Lord," Ps. xvi. 6. The Christian needs not merely that great forgiveness which is once for all, and that washing of the Holy Ghost which is once for all, but needs the daily forgiveness of the trespasses of the day, the washing of the hands which are busy in life's work, the washing of the feet which are soiled upon the road we traverse, Ex. xxx. 19. He that has had that great bathing of regeneration still needs renewed applications of the spiritual washing, John xiii. 1-10.

The Holy Spirit is the applier of the washing, for he takes of the things that are Christ's and makes them ours; but Christ's riven side is the source of the purifying flood—coming "not by water only, but by water and blood." "The Spirit and the water and the blood, these three agree in one," 1 John v. 6, 7. He is the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, Zech. xiii. 1. All his loved ones are washed, sanctified and justified in his name, 1 Cor. vi. 11. For Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water—by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost by the word, that He might present it to himself a glorious Church, holy and without blemish, Eph. v. 26; Tit. iii. 5.

4. The Golden Candlestick, in the Holy Place on the south side. On it the lamps were placed. It typifies the Church, dark in itself, but illumined by the presence and Spirit of Christ. Christ illumines the Church that the Church may enlighten the world.

Its seven parts mark its various functions and the adaptations of its various members to them. Christ is in the midst of them. The light symbolizes Him, at whose coming Zion is to arise and shine. He is the Glory of the Lord who arises upon her—a light to lighten the Gentiles—the true light which enlighteneth every man—the Light of the world—the Light of life. The arrangement was that of a vine-cluster of lights, about a centre. Christ is the central light, but his people are by His Grace the light of the world. The ornaments of the Candlestick, the golden flowers and fruits, add to its uses, the beauty of art copying nature, for nature and art are in their truest places when hallowed to the service of Christ. The perfumes of the alabaster box shed upon the head of our Lord are not wasted. The various instruments and arrangements connected with the Golden Candlestick were meant to keep the flame in its pure brightness, to typify the continuous brightness of the light of Grace which shines upon us, and to remind us to let our light "so shine."

5. The Golden Table stood on the north side of the Holy Place. It was designed for holding the Shew-Bread. It symbolizes the Church as that Holy Place in which Israel comes before God in the Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, and receives from God the Sacrament of Blessing.

6. The Ark of the Covenant was in the Holy of Holies, as described, Ex. xxv., xxxvii. It was prepared under the influence of the Spirit of God, in accordance with the model shown to Moses in the Mount. It was constructed of the choicest wood, and covered and lined with gold.

Inside the Ark was placed the Testimony, or Two Tables of the Law. The book of the Law, the urn which held the manna, and Aaron's rod which budded, were placed beside the Ark. The ceremonial object of the Ark was that it might be a sacramental token of the special presence of God.

As a type of Christ, the Ark symbolizes His gracious presence as God, in the Temple of His Church. Where the Ark went, divine strength and triumph attended it. It held the tables of the Law, and Christ came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfill it. The Law is beneath the Gospel, and the Gospel rests on the Law.

7. The Mercy-Seat, or Propitiatory, was the cover of the Ark of the Covenant. It was of pure gold throughout, Ex. xxv. 17. It was conceived of as a typical footstool of the throne of God, whence He revealed His mercy, for we seek mercy at the feet of our God. It was, with the Cherubim, the crowning glory of the Ark, which represented the Law. The Mercy-Seat rested on the Law, and yet was above it. That it ordinarily was in the thick darkness of the innermost shrine points to the King invisible, hidden impenetrably till the light of His own mercy reveals Him, at the entrance of the Supreme High-Priest into the Holiest of all.

God is in glory among the angels, but earth is His footstool, a lower part, but a true part, of His throne. The High-Priest himself would have been smitten to death, had he come unbidden into the Holy Place, within the veil before the Mercy-Seat, Lev. xvi. 2. When God appeared in the cloud upon the Mercy-Seat, the High-Priest was to approach with the censer, that the cloud of incense might cover the Mercy-Seat, that he die not. He was to sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offerings upon the Mercy-Seat and before it, Lev. xvi. 11-15. It was of gold, the most precious of metals; pure gold without alloy; no mere gilding or plating, but massive gold to the centre—emblem of the precious and pure mercy of God to which we have access through the atoning blood, and the High Priesthood of our Lord. "There will I meet with thee and commune with thee," v. 22. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need," Heb. iv. 16.

8. The Cherubim (the word is the Hebrew plural of Cherub) were two figures of gold, placed at the ends of the Mercy-Seat. Their faces were turned toward it, and their wings were expanded so as to touch above it. They symbolized the majesty of Jehovah, to whom all the created powers of the Universe, whether angelic, human, or physical, render homage and service—and all of which are interested, each in its own way, the highest the most deeply, in the great mystery of which the Mercy-Seat is the centre. They are the living things around the Throne. The Cherubim are not images of angels; they are symbols of angels, in common with the rest of God's creatures, and of angels by pre-eminence, as the highest of God's creatures.

IV. TYPICAL PERSONS.

THE Old Testament presents to us Typical Persons, "for," says AUGUSTINE, "the life of these men of old, like their tongues, was prophetic."

1. ADAM was a type of Christ. The old writers trace such parallels as these: Adam was the father of the whole race, from whom the whole race derives its natural life, as Christ is the source of the regenerate, new-born life of the world. 2. Adam was formed of the virgin earth, Christ sprang from a pure Virgin. 3. Adam was formed in the image of God, Christ is the express image of His person. 4. In Adam a body derived from earth and a spirit given from heaven were united, in Christ were personally blended the human and divine: "the second Man, is the Lord from heaven." 5. Adam was constituted lord of the earth, to Christ all power is given, all things are delivered into His hands. 6. Adam was the guardian of Eden, Christ is the opener and restorer of Paradise. 7. Adam was endowed with peculiar gifts of understanding, Christ is the possessor of all knowledge. 8. Adam unfallen was spotless, Christ is holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners.

Abel, Noah, Melchizedek, Abraham, Joseph, Jonah, David and Solomon have also furnished many suggestions to those who love to trace the substance of the New Testament in the shadows of the Old.

II. In the history of ABEL, many points of association with our Lord and his Church have been found. The name Abel itself speaks of the life of mourning, to which the man of sorrows was called. Abel was a keeper of sheep, and Christ is the great Shepherd. Abel in his offering showed forth the idea of sin felt and forsaken, of Atoning Sacrifice, of God's redeeming love; and these are the great central ideas of the dispensation of our Lord. Abel and his offering were regarded with acceptance by Jehovah, as Christ was the object of His infinite love, and His sacrifice was received with the infinite complacency of the Father. Abel was the object of malicious hate on the part of his brother, as Christ was of His own race and of the unregenerate world. It was the hate which purity excites in the corrupt heart. "Cain was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." Abel also embodied the great New Testament centre of personal salvation—Justification by Faith. "By Faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it, he being dead, yet speaketh."

But there is contrast as well as parallel. The blood of Abel cried for vengeance against his murderer. The dying Jesus prayed for His enemies—"Father, forgive them." The plea of His blood united with the intercession of His prayer for them and for us, and "we are come to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel," Gen. iv. 10; Heb. xii. 24.

III. ENOCH in his translation foreshadowed the passing of our Lord bodily into the heavens. So also did ELIJAH, but in both these cases death was passed by, not overcome. Their life was made secure only by the certainty that Christ would vanquish the enemy who, though evaded, lingered in unbroken might in the rear.

IV. NOAH was, as it were, a second Adam, the new father of the spared race, and a new type of Christ. The Ark is a type of the Church. The deluge which at once destroyed and saved is a type of that holy Baptism "of water and of the spirit," which in its divine efficacy, rightly received and used, destroys the old Adam, and raises the souls that are saved into newness of life, 1 Peter iii. 20-22.

V. The most wonderful of the personal types of Christ, is MELCHIZEDEK, and, next to our Lord himself, the most mysterious personage of history. "Bearing a title which Jews in after ages would recognize as designating their own sovereign, bearing gifts which recall to Christians the Lord's Supper, this Canaanite crosses for a moment the path of Abram, and is unhesitatingly recognized as a person of higher spiritual rank than the 'friend of God.' Disappearing as suddenly as he came in, he is lost to the sacred writings for a thousand years; and then a few emphatic words for another moment bring him into sight as a type of the coming Lord of David. Once more, after another thousand years, the Hebrew Christians are taught to see in him a proof that it was the consistent purpose of God to abolish the Levitical priesthood." He was not Enoch, nor Shem, nor Ham, nor Messiah the Son of God, nor the Holy Spirit. Conjecture has exhausted itself—and we know simply what the Book itself reveals. No hand of man or angel can draw the curtain farther away. His character, personal and official, was not fixed by his human relations, for in the land of the Canaanites he shines in the pure light of a righteous king, a prince of peace, a priest of the Most High. Melchizedek: "first being by interpretation king of righteousness"—and "righteousness shall be the girdle of His loins"—"and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." "After that also, the king of Salem, which is, king of peace"—and when He came, angels sang, "Peace upon earth." He is the "Prince of Peace." Melchizedek brings forth not an atoning sacrifice, but bread and wine for the nourishment and reviving of his great guest, Abraham, the father and type of believers, as Christ offers to the world the bread of heaven, the wine of rejoicing, and gives them supremely in giving himself, John vi., 55, 56. He was priest uniting in type the regal and sacerdotal, as does our Lord the priest-king. "He shall be a priest upon his throne," Zech. vi. 13. He was priest of the Most High God, towering in his majesty in a world utterly lapsed into idolatry. He stands before Abraham and reveals in the promise of his mystic office that in which Faith sees as present a far-off day, and rejoices in it. "And he blessed Abram, blessed him that had the promises, and without all contradiction the less is blessed of the greater." And Abram gave him tithes of all, and in Abram the tribe which was afterward exempted from tithes-paying, and received tithes, pays them to this priest who rises above the Levitical priesthood.

Melchizekek was, as priest, "without father, without mother, without descent or pedigree." His priesthood was not determined like the Levitical by natural descent—required and rested in no registry in authentication of parentage, but typified our Lord's as directly given from heaven. Christ sprang from a tribe which was as a tribe devoid of all claim to the priesthood, Heb. vii. 14.

Melchizedek, as priest, had "neither beginning of days nor end of life." His term of priesthood was not fixed by his age, beginning its days because his natural days were of this or that number, nor ending because his natural days had reached a certain bound. Ordained of God, individually his priesthood began, in God's purpose, with his very being, and ran on throughout all his life. His priestly life, as such, had no end. "Made like unto the Son of God, he abideth a priest continually," Heb. vii. 3. "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek." The priests under the Law "were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; but this man because he continueth for ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood—passing not from one to another. Wherefore he is able also to save to the uttermost—and for evermore—them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them," Heb. vii. 23-25.

VI. ABRAM was first a "high father," like a mountain standing in its grandeur, and towering in solitude. But he became ABRAHAM, the "father of a multitude." He stood no longer alone. The whole assembly of the faithful rose around him. He is the father and exemplar of all the faithful.

VII. ISAAC recalls the offering made by God's love for the salvation of the World. Abraham was tested; but, at the decisive moment, God provided a sacrifice which was accepted for Isaac. But that provision itself was possible, and answered its ends, only because God would not spare himself what He spared Abraham. "God so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son;" He spared not His own Son. When God's best beloved lay on the Altar, no substitute was found for Him, but He endured the anguish, and died to redeem us.

VIII. JOSEPH suggests many parallels. Like Christ "he came unto his own, and his own received him not." Rejected, he rose to the throne, forgave his brethren, saved them, enriched them, and exalted them.

In the Mosaic Economy, in connection with the richest typical period, the most prominent names are Moses, Aaron and Joshua.

IX. MOSES, like Christ, was saved from the death which was threatened in his infancy by the hatred of a cruel king; like Christ, renounced riches and kingly power to suffer humiliation, poverty and sorrow for his people's sake and God's glory; like Christ, led forth Israel from bondage, fed them with heavenly bread, refreshed them with living water, guided them to victory, interceded for them, taught them God's most holy will, was the mediator of the Covenant confirmed with blood, reared the Tabernacle of the Highest in the world—was Prophet, Priest and King. He was the founder and the highest representative of his race before God, as he was the representative of God to his people—and Christ is our Advocate with the Father, and the Revealer of the Father to us.

X. AARON's typical character is so merged in his High-Priesthood as to make a distinct treatment of it unnecessary. The office of Moses was unique and he had no successors. There arose no prophet like unto him—until the Supreme Prophet came, like him, yet as the light of noontide is like the light of dawn. The office of Aaron was a general one, and was transmitted—there was an order of Aaron, but no order of Moses. In Moses the office was embodied in the man, in Aaron the man was lost in the office, and we shall therefore in its place consider it rather than him.

XI. JOSHUA is typical of Christ in his name, which means "Jehovah Saviour." He was the servant of Moses, as Christ was the minister of the circumcision, Gal. iv. 4. He was full of the spirit of wisdom (Deut. xxxiv. 9), the spirit which rested without measure on Christ. He finished what Moses began, he brought the people of God into the Land of Promise, by his victories secured it to them, and put them in possession of its rest. Christ's people in Him find rest for their souls, inherit the incorruptible, the undefiled and unfading Kingdom of Heaven.

XII. DAVID was a type of Christ. He was the great representative monarch of Israel, the victor over its enemies, the establisher of its kingdom, and, in his true, uncorrupted character, the "man after God's heart." He is the type of Christ, as Christ is related to the Church militant—the Church in her warfare, both assailing evil and assailed by it.

XIII. As David typifies Christ as the Captain of our Salvation, coming for a time to bring not peace upon earth, but a sword, so SOLOMON typifies our Lord as the Prince of Peace, Head of the Church triumphant, its enemies subdued, tranquility and joy in all its borders. With Solomon, the Tabernacle, once wandering, is fixed—is transfigured into the Temple. This typifies the final glory of Christ's Kingdom in the New Jerusalem, where every part shall be so supremely holy that degrees of sanctity shall pass away. There shall be no Temple therein, for all shall be Temple. "The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it," Rev. xxi. 22.

XIV. But not only were these individuals typical, ISRAEL itself, as a Nation, was a typical race. The old Church foreshadowed the new in its trials, deliverance and glories. These types of the old Israel, are bound to the antitypes of the new Israel. Israel was a race of kings and priests—and we are, like them, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, to show forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into His marvelous light, 1 Pet. ii. 9.

V. TYPICAL OFFICIAL PERSONS.

1. THE High-Priest was alone in his order. He is not called the highest, as if the others were like him, except in degree—as if they were high, and higher, and he simply highest. He is the High-Priest; "the chief" or head priest (Jer. xii. 24), and "chief over the chief of the Levites," Num. iii. 32. His office endured through his entire life. He was supreme in the Church. He was to possess the highest endowments of person, body, mind and character.

The anointing of the High-Priest, by which he was solemnly consecrated to his office, was different from all the other anointings. His head, not his raiment, was anointed, and the anointing was not by sprinkling, but by copious outpouring. "God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows," Ps. xlv. 7; Heb. i. 9. The High-Priest is designated as "the priest that is anointed," the Messiah Priest, Lev. iv. 3. "God anointed Jesus with the Holy Ghost and with power," Acts x. 38. "God giveth not the spirit by measure unto Him," John iii. 34.

The garments of the High-Priest were of the richest kind "for glory and for beauty," Ex. xxviii. 2. "He beautified him," says Sirach, "with comely ornaments, and clothed him with a robe of glory. He put upon him perfect glory; and strengthened him with rich garments." The same writer, describing a High-Priest "in his coming forth from behind the veil," says: "He was as the morning star in the midst of a cloud, and as the moon at the full; as the sun shining upon the Temple of the Most High, and as the rainbow giving light in the bright clouds; and as the flavor of roses in the spring of the year, as lilies by the rivers of waters, and as the branches of the frankincense tree in the time of summer; as fire and incense in the censer, and as a vessel of beaten gold set with all manner of precious stones; and as a fair olive-tree budding forth fruit, and as a cypress-tree which groweth up to the clouds. When he put on the robe of honor, and was clothed with the perfection of glory, when he went up to the holy altar, he made the garment of holiness honorable," Ecclus. xlv. 7; 1. 6-11. The High-Priest's dress consisted of four parts in common with the other Priests, while four parts, (to-wit: the breastplate, the ephod, the ephod robe and mitre) were peculiar to him.

The High-Priest, in his exalted office and personal dignity, foreshadows the glory of the person and office of our Lord. He sought and announced the will of God by Urim and Thummim; he consecrated and initiated the Priests and Levites; he presided in the sacred conventions and directed in all matters of religion. The High-Priest alone went into the Second Tabernacle, "once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people; but Christ being come, an High-Priest of good things to come by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, He entered in once into the Holy Place, having obtained eternal redemption for us," Heb. ix.

The High-Priest was to abstain at the times of deepest sorrow, from the ordinary manifestations of grief. He was, shadowing Christ, to show his separateness, even in the sphere of his sympathy. The High-Priest could marry only a pure virgin and might marry the daughter of a king—as Christ takes to himself His Church, the virgin daughter of the great King. Not till the death of the High-Priest could those who had taken refuge in the appointed cities leave them, and Christ died "that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage," Heb. ii. 14, 15.

2. The Priests (Ex. xix.) typically represent that spiritual priesthood into which all believers are called by God for His service and into which they are introduced by Christ (Ex. xix. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5-9; Rev. i. 6), to offer up spiritual sacrifices. The tip of the ear, the thumb and the foot of the priests were anointed, as symbols of the total consecration of the whole priesthood, not alone in soul and spirit, but in body also—in all its senses, activities and powers. The Priest's hands were to be filled when they approached the altar, as the hand of the believer brings to God the offerings of gifts and of holy works, of religion and of charity. The official duties of the Tabernacle, the benediction of the people, the proclamation of the Festivals, the sounding of the trumpet, the teaching of the Law, the bearing of the Ark, point to the various forms of fidelity and usefulness in all believers, and pre-eminently in the Ministers of the Gospel. The various peculiar personal duties of the Priests set forth the sanctity, sobriety and purity which become all Christians, and especially all Ministers.

When the Priests were to be consecrated, their old garments were to be laid aside, as we must put off the old, before we can put on the new. Their bodies were washed with clean water (Ex. xxix. 4), and we are to "draw near, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," Heb. x. 22. "Christ has washed us from our sins, and made us priests unto God," Rev. i. 5, 6. The same precious oil which was poured upon the High-Priest, and which was never to be used except for holy things and holy persons, was sprinkled upon the Priests—they had the unction of the Highest, though in a less degree—as every believer receives the anointing of God (1 John v. 20, 27), in due measure, from the fullness of Him, on whom it descends without measure. After the washing and unction, the vestments were put upon them. They were not, under penalty of death, to drink wine nor strong drink when they went into the Tabernacle—as we, for love's sake, are to touch nothing which may be attended by dishonor to God, and become a cause of stumbling to our fellow men. The Priest's person was to be without blemish and his life without spot—and we are to be holy, as He which hath called us is holy. We are "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that we should shew forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light," 1 Pet. ii. 9.

3. The Levites or Priestly race (Ex. vi. 25), typify the same general truths that are typified by the Priests, but they show forth more especially the great element of willing aid, the harmony of the lesser gift, with the greater—that, while there are differences of administration, there is one Spirit.

4. The Prophets were teachers of the people, expounders and appliers of the Word of God, reformers of the Church, utterers of predictions, preachers of the Law and Gospel, and performers of miracles. In this they typify the Great Prophet, the Teacher of the world—who sent forth also His faithful Ministers, as the Father sent Him.

5. The Nazarites (Num. vi. 2-21) typify the self-sacrificing separation voluntarily made, in God's service, supremely by Christ, but, after His most blessed example, by all who are truly His.

6. The Kings, Ex. xv. 18; Deut. vii. 14, 15. The regal office of our Lord is typified in its true grandeur in the theocracy, when Jehovah was temporal King of His people, and in the particular kings of a later time its various features are shown forth—especially in David and Solomon.

VI. TYPICAL THINGS, NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL.

1. THE Animals which God accepted in sacrifice, were to be clean and therefore proper as food, were gentle and domesticated, or associated with man and free from imperfections. These animals were:

1. The Ox; the Bull; the Bullock, the Heifer and Calf.
2. The Sheep; the Ram, the Lamb.
3. The Goat; the Kid.
4. The Turtle-dove; the Pigeon.

These all symbolize the gentleness, meekness and spotlessness of the One True Sacrifice, the Lamb of God, who was led as a sheep to the slaughter; who was like a lamb dumb before his shearers; whose innocent and precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish or spot, was shed for men, and whose flesh is given for the life, and is the food, of the world.

2. The Oil was to be of the most perfect purity, prepared direct from the fruit of the Olive—the tree of peace, the token of pardon. It fed the flame—as the Holy Ghost supplies all grace. The anointing oil, reviving and consecrating, typifies the oil of joy, shed in supremest measure on Christ, our High-Priest and King. Healing, it typifies the saving application made by the Good Samaritan to the wounds of our sinful nature. Fragrant, it symbolizes the acceptableness of the offering brought by devout hearts—and it is like pure Love, which hallows all it touches.

3. The Vestments, or holy garments of the High-Priest, are the subject of very minute directions, Ex. xxviii. Clothing should express character, personal or official, and be in harmony with it. The glory and beauty of the Priestly robes symbolize the majesty and loveliness of Christ in his Person, Office and Work, whom God hath clothed with the garments of salvation, and hath covered with the robe of righteousness, Isa. xi. 10. The most precious materials, the most vivid and significant colors, the most exquisite workmanship, symbolizing the highest glories of earth and heaven, combined to give to the garments of the High-Priest a fitness for association with his work—in which he typified our Lord, who unites in His Nature, His Person and Character all that is fairest in the two worlds—who is “chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely.”

4. The Urim and Thummim, lights and perfections, Manifestation or Revelation and Truth, were precious stones set in the Breastplate which the High-Priest was to put on when he went in before the Lord, Ex. xxviii. 30; Lev. viii. 3; Num. xxvii. 21; Deut. xxxiii. 8. They point to Christ as the Manifestor of the mind of God, the source of guidance and relief in all the perplexities of His Church and of His people.

5. The “Plate of Pure Gold,” in the shape of an open blossom, with “Holiness to Jehovah,” engraved thereon, was to be put on the Mitre of the High-Priest. This symbolizes the perfect consecration of the Great High-Priest.

6. The Girdle reminds us of Him of whom the Prophet says: “Righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins,” Isa. xi. 5.

7. The Vestments of the Priests shared in the glory and beauty of those of the High-Priest, yet were inferior—to symbolize the fact that though His glory is given by Christ to His priestly people, He yet in all things has the pre-eminence.

8. The Incense, rising in clouds from the burning coals, is like the prayers and praises of the saints which soar heavenward from hearts kindled by devotion. Most of all, is it like the intercessory prayers of the great Mediator, through which all other prayer is acceptable to God.

9. The Colors were of the richest and most expressive nature. Principal among them were Blue, Purple, Scarlet, Crimson, Red, Golden, and White.

The Blue was the deep, dark blue of the Oriental sky. It was a natural symbol of heaven and the heavenly, of the habitation of God, and of the softened revelation of His grace and glory.

The Purple was associated with the supremest dignity, with exalted position, and therefore symbolized the regal position of God as King of Israel. The clothing of our Lord with the purple robe was unconscious confession and undesigned prophecy, Matt. xxvii. 28; John xix. 2.

Scarlet, Crimson, blood-Red, was the symbol of life and energy, of the absolute energy and immortal life of God, and of His love which imparts life and energy.

Josephus considers the four colors, White, Purple, Blue and Scarlet, as symbolizing the four great elemental parts of the Universe—the earth, yielding the flax for the white linen; the sea, from which was taken the costly shell-fish of the purple; the blue, air; and the deep-red, fire.

In a brilliant and ingenious little book, lately published under the title “Solar Hieroglyphics,” the whole symbolism of light and color is developed in a very suggestive manner.

White was the color of the curtains of the fine-twined linen of the Tabernacle, Ex. xxvi. 1, and of the ephod of the priests, Ex. xxviii. 5, 6. It is the color of the apparel in Angelic manifestations, Matt. xxviii. 3; Mark xvi. 5; John xx. 12. To the Bride of Christ is granted that she shall be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. The armies in Heaven follow the Word of God upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, Rev. xix. 8, 14. It is the symbol of triumph. When Messiah goes forth conquering and to conquer He sits upon a white horse, Rev. vi. 2; xix. 11. It is the symbol of His Eternal Deity: “His head and His hair was white like wool, as white as snow,” Rev. i. 14. When He comes wearing His golden crown, and bearing the sickle for the earth's final reaping, He sits upon a white cloud, Rev. xiv. 14. Through the Book of Revelation, white is the Saviour's color, it belongs alone to Him and to them who are His. In the Transfiguration, which was a temporary revelation of our Lord in “the form of God,” His “raiment was white as the light, and glistening,” Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 3; Luke ix. 29. White is the symbol of beauty and innocence: of majesty and glory: of eternity, wisdom, righteousness and holiness: of prosperity and gladness. It was a special symbol of the sanctity and majesty of God as the Holy and Glorious One of Israel. It shadowed forth the sanctification of God through Israel, and of Israel by God; but most of all the attributes of the revealing Jehovah, the incarnate Son of God, our Saviour.

10. The Perfumes embraced the sweetest principal spices: Stacte, Onycha, Galbanum, Ex. xxx. 34; Myrrh, Frankincense, Cassia, Cinnamon. The preparation of these was of the most careful kind. They typified the fragrance of holiness, and the attractiveness of the supremely holy Saviour.

11. The Shew-bread figured the Body of our Lord, as the Bread from Heaven, John vi., and in its place the presentation of our Lord's ascended Body before the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens.

12. The Hyssop, with Cedar-wood and scarlet, was the instrument of purgation, typical of the applying instrumentality of the blood of sprinkling, with which he that is purged is truly clean, Ps. li. 7.

Among the other plants and fruits which come into the typical world, are the fruits at large which were given to the Lord: the Almonds of Aaron's budding rod; the Pomegranates (images of the fragrance of truth and the fruitfulness of life) which were wrought on the hem of the Ephod, Ex. xxviii. 33, and suggested the form of the knops on the Golden Candlestick, Ex. xxvi. 31; the Vine, Grapes and Wine.

VII. TYPICAL ACTS.

GOD, as holy King, dwells in holy places, and is served by holy persons. In these places, these persons bring before Him holy things in HOLY ACTS. These holy acts are:—1. The presentation of Sacrifices and Offerings. 2. The Sacrificial Feasts and sacrifices and offerings. 3. The giving of First-Fruits. 4. The paying of tithes, or tenth-parts. 5. The making of vows. 6. The investitures. 7. The purifications under the law.

SACRIFICES AS TYPICAL ACTS.

1. The Sacrifices are divided into seven classes:
 - a. The Holocaust, or whole Burnt-Offering.
 - b. The Sin-Offering, the Sacrifice or Offering for Sin, Heb. x. 6, 8.
 - c. Trespass-Offering, Lev. v. 15.
 - d. Thank-Offering, or Peace-Offering, Ex. xx. 24.
 - e. The First-Born, First-Begotten, Ex. xiii. 2.
 - f. Tithes of Beasts, Lev. xxvii. 32.
 - g. The Paschal Lamb, Ex. xii.

These have been reduced to three general classes: the SELF-DEDICATORY, the EUCHARISTIC and the EXPIATORY.

The order of the ceremonial actions presented many points of typical suggestion:

First was the bringing or presentation of the Sacrifice. The hands were laid upon the head of the victim, and confession of sin was made, or, in the Thank-Offering, praise was given to God. The victim was slain. The blood was sprinkled. There was a waving and a heaving of the parts of the Sacrifice. The parts were laid on the altar; were salted; were laid upon the fire; certain parts of the Sacrifice were eaten, some by the Priests, others by those who brought the victims. The Sacrifice was consumed with fire.

The following points may be noticed in the Sacrifices as types:

1. All Expiatory Sacrifices were types of the One Atoning Sacrifice, made for the sins of the whole world, by our Lord, through His most perfect obedience, His sufferings, and His death on the Cross.

2. The system of Sacrifices was ordained for the cleansing of men from sin, and "now once in the end of the world hath Christ appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself," Heb. ix. 26.

3. All the Sacrifices were to be perfect and spotless. "Whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer; for it shall not be acceptable for you," Lev. xxii. 19, 20. "This is the offering, two lambs without spot," Num. xxviii. 3. Christ offered himself without spot to God, Heb. ix. 14. He is a Lamb without blemish and without spot, 1 Pet. i. 19.

4. The person offering was to confess his sins, Lev. v. 5; and if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, 1 John i. 9.

5. He was to put his hand on the head of the Burnt-Offering, Lev. i. 4. It was a solemn act of transfer, in which, in faith in God's assurance, he realized that the penalty of his guilt was to be laid upon a True Sacrifice, of which the ritual Sacrifice was a type. "Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed. . . . The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all," Isa. liii. 4-6. Faith is the hand of the soul, the power by which it lays hold. By it resting on Christ, we rejoice in the assurance that He has taken our sins on His sinless head; "that God hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him," 2 Cor. v. 21.

6. The victim was slain, Ex. xxix. 11. Our Lord was brought as a Lamb to the slaughter, Isa. liii. 7; Acts viii. 32. In the midst of the throne He stands, a Lamb as it had been slain. In the new song, they sing "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." The names of God's children are written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

7. The victim was slain before the Lord, by His appointment, in the way, at the time and place, appointed by Him, God looking upon it and accepting it. Christ is no self-elected, self-imposed sacrifice, but is the Lamb ordained and accepted of God.

8. It was slain at the door of the Tabernacle—brought within the sphere of the supernatural, and standing in relations not of this world. The sacrificial efficacy of Christ's blood is not derived from the ideas and relations of the world of nature. The sphere in which His sacrifice is operative is that of the True Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, a greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with hands, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven, Rev. xv. 5.

9. The blood was taken. This, says our Lord, is my blood of the New Testament—the New Testament in my blood.

10. The blood was taken, for the Sacrifice was not only to be made, but was to be applied. "Take," says our Lord—"this is my body." The glorious distinctive work of the Spirit is the work of reception in order to impartation. "He shall glorify me; for He shall receive (take) of mine, and shall show it unto you." The Sacrifice made would not avail, if it were not a sacrifice taken and applied.

11. The blood was applied to the Altar also. Nothing of earth is so pure as not to need the cleansing power of the atoning blood. None of the attendant things, separable from Christ's work, added to its efficacy. He hallows the Cross, not the Cross Him, and all He sanctifies are things of association with Him. The Cross is itself the dark and accursed instrument of torture and murder. Yet the blood which has sprinkled has made it a symbol of the world's hope and joy. "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

12. The blood was applied with the finger. This symbolizes the divine care, and the solicitous exactness and perfect adaptation in the application of the atoning blood. The Bible speaks of the arm of God, the hand of God, and the finger of God, Luke xi. 20. All these express power, but the finger is the instrument of power as most minutely and specifically directed; it marks individualizing power.

13. A portion of the blood was poured out at the bottom of the Altar, Ex. xxix. 12. The blood of our great Sacrifice was freely poured forth for men, and the Altar of the world's redemption has the blood of Christ on it, and at its base.

14. The typical Sacrifice was considered in two great aspects: First, as typical of the Saviour's merit—its richest portions, expressive of value, were laid upon the Altar and received there of God, Ex. xxix. 13. Secondly, as typical of the odiousness of sin—Christ as our representative was made sin and a curse for us, and representatively bore the wrath of God, Ex. xxix. 14. "The bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the High-Priest for sin, are burned without the camp; wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate," Hebrews, xiii. 11, 12.

15. The blood was sprinkled. Sprinkling is the act of distribution. The efficacy of the Atonement is as broad as it is specific. It is applied to each alone; it is applied to the many in masses. As the finger marks the perfection of its adaptation, the sprinkling marks its freeness. Messiah is to sprinkle many nations, Isa. lii. 15. The blood of Christ is that blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel, Heb. xii. 24; by it we have our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, Heb. x. 22; for we are chosen unto sprinkling of the blood of Jesus, 1 Pet. i. 2.

16. The blood was to be sprinkled seven times. Seven is the number symbolic of perfection. The blood of Christ is perfect in its virtue; God uses the means for its perfect application, and it cleanses from all sin.

17. When the High-Priest entered into the Most Holy Place, he was to take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the Mercy-Seat eastward; and before the Mercy-Seat he was to sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times. He was then to kill the Goat of the Sin-Offering, that was for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and sprinkle it also upon the Mercy-Seat and before it, and thus make an atonement for the Holy Place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins, Lev. xvi. 14-16. These typical acts closely associate the efficacy of Christ's blood with His efficacy as Intercessor, His redemption with His character as the Propitiation (the Mercy-Seat), for God has set Him forth to be a Propitiation (or Mercy-Seat) through faith in His blood, Rom. iii. 25. We approach the Father by approaching Christ. The atoning blood of Christ gives Him the character of the Mercy-Seat. Where Christ is, there, says God, "will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the Mercy-Seat," Ex. xxv. 14-22. Christ is our mighty intercessor in the Heaven of heavens, in which He appears, and pleads the merit of His blood.

It was to be sprinkled eastward, toward the sun-rising—emblem of spiritual hope and joy, suggestive of the bright and Morning Star, Rev. xii. 16, and of the rising of the Sun of Righteousness, with healing in His wings, Mal. iv. 2, and of "the tender mercy of our God; whereby the Day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide the feet of the perplexed into the way of peace," Luke i. 78, 79. The blood of Christ is a power within the Veil. The type foreshadowed the acceptance in the highest Heaven of what was done on Earth, and our hope enters with our Forerunner, Christ, into that which is within the Veil, Heb. vi. 19, 20. The great underlying thought is, that the Atoning blood of Christ touches heaven as well as earth, is to God-ward as well as to Man-ward, is not a mere appeal to man, but is a governmental necessity of God, that it is not needed alone to reconcile us to the Father—as much of the shallow thinking of the hour considers it—but also is needed to reconcile the Father to us. The sacrifice of Christ is not merely an at-one-ment, as the means of bringing about unity, but it is a propitiation. Christ is the propitiation for our sins, sent by the Father to this great end, 1 John ii. 2, iv. 10—that is, there is just wrath to be averted, undeserved favor to be conciliated, equity to be harmonized with pity. Christ is our absolute need, for we should perish without Him; but He is also the relative need of God—that is, God's administration needs Christ for the voluntary ends of its all-embracing mercy. The Atonement is not a mere argument from God reconciled in advance of it, and aiming by it at a mere breaking down of our reluctance to be at peace with Him, but it is the mighty instrument by which God is reconciled; by which His holiness can be harmonized with His pity; by which God might be just, and yet the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

18. One of the most striking acts of the sacrificial ritual was the waving and heaving up of the offerings. They were put on the hands of the Priests and waved, shaken to and fro, for a wave-offering before the Lord, Ex. xxix. 24-27. As the waving was from side to side, the heaving was an upward motion. The offering was swung to and fro; and then with the impetus thus given was raised aloft. The sheaf of first-fruits was also to be waved before the Lord, to be accepted for the people, on the morrow after the Sabbath, Lev. xxiii. 11, 12. The lamb for the poor man's trespass-offering was to be waved to make an atonement for him, Lev. xiv. 21-24. Waving and heaving formed one of the most striking and common actions of the ritual.

The taking of the offerings into the priestly hands marked them at once as separated from their natural connections. The wave-offering was the accompaniment of peace-offerings. The Rabbis explain the heaving of the shoulder as an acknowledgment that God has His throne in Heaven, the waving of the breast that He is present in every quarter of the Earth. The one rite testified to his eternal majesty on high, the other to His being among and with his people.

19. Every oblation of the Meat-offering was seasoned with salt. They were not to suffer the salt of the covenant of their God to be lacking. With all their offerings they were to offer salt, Lev. ii. 13. Salt is the symbol of resistance to change, hence the symbol of covenant relation of personal incorruption, of preservation through grace.

20. The consummation of the sacrificial act was by fire: it was burned to ashes. Fire is the instrument of divine resumption. It breaks up the uses and relations of the object seized by it, and restores them to their elemental conditions. It destroys corruption, it restores purity. By it God accepts that which is pleasing to Him, and destroys that which He abhors. Fire is the image of the work of the Spirit; it is also the image of the destruction of the lost. Fire accepts the sacrifice as offered to God; it destroys it as representative of sin and guilt. It images the intense and consuming sorrows and sufferings of the Saviour in His passion and bloody death.

21. The Expiatory Sacrifices were always to be accompanied by the Eucharistic Sacrifices, to symbolize the duty of showing forth the praises of Him who hath redeemed us. The Meat-Offerings, the Peace-or Thank-Offering, and the other Eucharistic Sacrifices were a sign of thankful services. "The characteristic ceremony in the Peace-Offering was the eating of the flesh by the sacrificer (after the fat had been burnt before the Lord, and breast and shoulder given to the Priests). It betokened the enjoyment of communion with God 'at the table of the Lord' in the gifts which His mercy had bestowed."

22. "It is clear that the idea of sacrifice is a complex idea, involving the propitiatory, and the dedicatory and the eucharistic elements. Any one of them taken by itself, would lead to error and superstition. The propitiatory alone would tend to the idea of atonement by sacrifice for sin, or being effectual without any condition or repentance and faith; the self-dedicatory, taken alone, ignores the barrier of sin between man and God, and undermines the whole idea of atonement; the eucharistic alone leads to the notion that mere gifts can satisfy God's service, and is easily perverted into the heathenish attempt to 'bribe' God by vows and offerings."

The SACRIFICES of the Mosaic Economy open with the PASSOVER, which is pre-eminently typical of the Paschal Festival of the New Testament, because in the Passover, we have a Sacrifice, which prepares the way for a Sacrament, the Passover being both Sacrifice and Sacrament. In a Sacrifice we give to God, in a Sacrament God gives to us; in a Sacrifice we impart, in a Sacrament we receive. The typical relation between Christ and the Paschal Lamb may be presented in this—

TABLE OF PARALLELS.

| THE PASCHAL LAMB. | CHRIST. |
|---|--|
| 1. Was to be a male of the flock. | 1. Was to be true man. |
| 2. Without spot. | 2. Without sin. |
| 3. Slain, and roasted. | 3. Suffered and was crucified, "our passover is sacrificed [or slain] for us," 1 Cor. v. 7. |
| 4. His legs were not to be broken. | 4. Not a bone of Him was broken. |
| 5. Was to be slain between the evenings. | 5. Died in the third hour of the afternoon. |
| 6. The lintel and posts were to be struck with the blood. | 6. His blood is sprinkled for the saving of the soul, Heb. xii. 24; 1 Pet. i. 2. |
| 7. The destroyer was not suffered to come in where the blood was sprinkled. | 7. The blood of sprinkling speaketh better things than that of Abel. |
| 8. The lamb was to be eaten entire. | 8. Christ is ours, and is to be taken wholly. |
| 9. To be eaten without leaven. | 9. "Let us keep the feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth," 1 Cor. vii. 8. |
| 10. To be eaten with bitter herbs. | 10. Bitter is the bondage from which Christ redeems us. |
| 11. To be eaten in haste, with the loins girded as for a journey. | 11. "Let your loins be girded about, and ye yourselves like unto men who wait for their Lord," Luke xii. 35, 36. |
| 12. To be eaten by those only who were in the covenant. | 12. Christ in the power of His saving blood is received only by those embraced in the new covenant. |

Next to the Paschal Lamb in the uniqueness and richness of suggestion is the Red Heifer, Num. xix. 2-10. The points that have been specially noted in regard to the Red Heifer in the original and the later ritual, are these:

a. The Heifer of pure red color was very rare in Palestine, and of great price. The Red Heifer of this rite was to be without spot or blemish, no yoke was to have come upon her.

b. The Heifer was to be given the Priest of special dignity, the Sagan or representative of the High-Priest, who at the time of the institution of the rule, was Eleazar, the son of Aaron.

c. The Heifer was taken to Mount Olive to be slain there. The pile of wood on which the body was to be burned faced toward the Temple.

d. When the Red Heifer had been slain the Priest took the blood with his left hand, dipped into it his finger, and sprinkled of her blood directly before the tabernacle or temple seven times, with his eyes turned to its eastern gate.

e. The Heifer was then completely burned in his sight. The skin, the flesh, the blood, everything was burned. During the burning, cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet wool were cast into the flame.

f. The Ashes of the Heifer were carefully gathered, and separated into three parts. One part was kept on Mount Olivet, and was mingled with living water, and used to purify the children of Israel. Another part was taken to the Temple for the purification of the Priests. The third part was reserved as a memorial.

g. The burning of the Red Heifer was a rite of very rare occurrence. The Jewish doctors say that it took place but once in the era of the first Temple (including the time of the Tabernacle), and this while Moses was living. The other eight occasions were during the time of the second Temple.

There are great writers on Typology who consider the Red Heifer the most complete of the Types of Christ.

The red color marks the hue of sin, Isa. i. 18, which Christ bore in its penalty and curse as our representative. The Heifer, though bearing the hue of sin, was to be without spot or blemish, and Christ, though He was made sin for us, knew no sin, He was without spot or blemish, holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, Heb. vii. 26; 2 Cor. v. 21. The Heifer was to have known no yoke, and Christ's submission to the Law was purely spontaneous. He was "made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law." He lay down His life of Himself. The Red Heifer was slain outside of the camp in the presence of all the people. "The bodies of those beasts whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the High-Priest for sin, are burned without the camp. Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp bearing His reproach," Heb. xiii. 11-13. On the Mount of Olives the first blood-shedding of the Atonement took place where our Saviour's blood fell, mingled with His sweat, to the ground. Nor is it a mere matter of accidental coincidence that the chief priestly actor in the Sacrifice of Christ was not Annas, who was the High-Priest, but Caiaphas, his son-in-law, who was his Sagan or vicar. The purification by the sprinkling of the ashes of the Heifer points to the cleansing efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ: "For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" Heb. ix. 13, 14.

The sense of the need of sacrifice has "been deeply rooted in men's hearts, and has been from the beginning accepted and sanctioned by God, and made by Him one channel of His revelation. In virtue of that sanction it has a value partly symbolical, partly actual, but in all respects derived from the one True Sacrifice of which it was the type. All its ideas are capable of full explanation only by the light reflected back from the Antitype."

VIII. TYPICAL TIMES AND OCCASIONS.

THE typical times and occasions may be classified with respect to the frequency of occurrence, as, daily, the times of daily service; weekly, the Sabbath; monthly, the New Moon; annual, the three great Festivals, the Passover, the Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles; the New Year or Day of Trumpets, and the Day of Atonement; every fifty years, the Year of Jubilee.

1. Every day a bullock was to be offered for a Sin-Offering for Atonement. It was to be day by day continually, Ex. xxix. 36. Two lambs were to be offered, one in the morning, the other in the evening. It was an affecting confession of a need constantly existing and never met—"the Priest offering oftentimes the same sacrifices which can never take away sins."

2. The Sabbath shadowed that rest of soul which is to be found in Christ, Matt. xi. 28, and the Sabbatism of that holy and eternal rest into which God receives His people when the world's whole work of toil is past for ever, Heb. iii. 3, and they rest from their labors, Rev. xiv. 13.

3. The New Moon was the calendar of all infant nations. The sun marked the day, the moon the month, and the division of the lunar month into quarters gave the weeks. The New Moons are constantly referred to by Moses as already familiar to the people in sacred connections. The New Moon called the people to thanksgiving for the mercies of the month, the mercies which came from the Father of light, in whom is no variableness nor shadow of turning. It gave the great lesson of finding in all the visible and changing the reminders of what we owe to the invisible God, and to our unchanging and faithful Saviour.

4. The day of the Passover was Israel's birthday as a distinct and chosen nation, and shadowed forth the transition of the New Testament Israel into the glorious liberty, purchased by Christ's Death and sealed by His Resurrection. Its typology centres in the Paschal Lamb and the Paschal Supper.

5. Pentecost came on the fiftieth day after the second day of the Passover. It is called the Feast of Weeks and Feast of the Seventh, because it followed the seven weeks—the seven sevens—after the Passover. It was also called the Feast of Harvest, because by the time of its coming the harvest, which began at the Passover, was ended. It occurs at the general time of the giving of the Law on Sinai, and hence the Rabbis call it the Day of the Giving of the Law.

On Pentecost, the fiftieth day after our Lord's Resurrection, the Spirit was poured out upon the disciples. It marks the harvest consummation of the great work begun at the Paschal Sacrifice of the Lamb of God. It was to be kept with a tribute of a free-will offering according as the Lord had blessed the giver, and thus taught us to honor the Lord with our substance, to lay by us in store as God hath prospered us, knowing that if there be a willing mind it is accepted of God, according to that a man hath, Deut. xvi. 9, 10; Prov. iii. 9; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; 2 Cor. viii. 12.

The wave-loaves of fine flour offered at this feast were to be baked with leaven, for leaven not only symbolizes change and corruption, but also symbolizes self-diffusing, self-assimilating power, and in this latter aspect "the Kingdom of Heaven is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened," Lev. xxiii. 17; Matt. xiii. 33. And in this way the link of association is made between typical reference of this Festival to the Pentecostal effusion of the Spirit and the Parable of the Leaven. The Pentecost points out who it is, by whose most blessed word the Gospel is to be spread abroad in all the world, even the Holy Ghost, and the Parable points out how and through what the work is done, even the Word of God, with its self-diffusing, all-assimilating, all-leavening power.

Here also, as in all types, by the very nature of the case, there are contrasts as well as likenesses. For as we know of what a shadow is the shadow, by its likeness to the thing which casts it—so we also know that it is the shadow, and not the thing itself, by its contrast with that thing. We know the shadow of a man by its conformity, so far as its nature allows, with the man who casts it; but it is so unlike him that we contrast it even more than we compare it with him. Contrast the giving of the Old Covenant with the smoking and quaking mountain, the trembling and appalled people, its thunders and lightnings, its awful trumpet-peal as if the judgments of a violated law were already bursting on the world—contrast these with the gentler, yet no less expressive tokens of the Christian Pentecost, the rushing mighty wind, emblem of the Spirit in His world-wide breathings, the cloven tongues of fire, which told of the divine flames which human tongues taught of God were to kindle. The Old Pentecost commemorated the giving of a Law written on those stones which imaged the hardness of the natural heart, the New Pentecost was accompanied by the outpouring of that Spirit, who takes away the heart of stone, and on the tenderer heart, the heart of flesh, which is his own work, writes the New Law of Love, Heb. xii. 14-24. The offering of the firstlings in the Old speaks of that more glorious bringing in of the first-fruits of the New Pentecost, the Gentiles and Jews (each in their own way, prepared by Providence for the grace of the common Father of men), who were among the redeemed at the first outpouring, Rom. xvi. 5; Rev. xiv. 4.

6. The day of Atonements (the Hebrew word is always in the plural), Lev. xxiii. 27, was one of special solemnity and humiliation. The Talmud calls it "the Day." It was no feast or festival. On this day only, the High-Priest was permitted to enter the Holy of Holies.

After observing every precaution necessary for the strictest purity, he bathed, robed himself in white, offered sacrifice for himself and for the people. He burned incense in the Most Holy, so that the mercy-seat was hidden by clouds of smoke, and sprinkled the blood before the mercy-seat seven times, toward the East. Passing from the Most Holy into the Holy Place, where none but he was permitted at this time, he purified it by sprinkling blood on the Altar of incense. The rites involved all the chosen race, beginning with the High-Priest and his family and ending with the entire people. It was kept five days before the Feast of Tabernacles, in its atoning significance and deep sadness preparing for that great feast of rejoicing. It was the Kyrie before the Gloria in Excelsis. It tells us that the shedding of blood is needed for Remission, and that the penitent seeking of pardon is the pathway to the assurance of faith. The great central act in the part of the High-Priest points to Christ, who "is not entered into holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: nor yet that he should offer Himself often, as the High-Priest entereth into the holy place every year with the blood of others; for then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself," Heb. x. 24-26.

7. The Day of Preparation for the Day of Atonements was "a memorial of blowing of trumpets." On that day in the Tabernacles, and subsequently in the Temple, were blown, from early dawn until night, not the silver trumpets of gladness, but the winding trumpets of rams-horns. It was a sound of sadness they gave forth, and was meant to call men to that penitential preparation which is needed for the Day of Expiation. The Word has its note of sadness as well as of joy. The Word makes tears before it dries them. Only in the heart saddened by a true repentance, claimed by the fore-running Law, springs up the joyous assurance of the Gospel flowing from faith in the Atonement. It was also called the beginning of the year, because it was fixed for the first day of the month Tisri, which, though the seventh month ecclesiastically, was the first month of the civil year. It was related to the great day for which it made men ready as the ministry of John the Baptist was to the work of our Lord. It prefigured a ministry of preparation, a going before the face of the Lord—a lifting up of the voice like a trumpet to show God's people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins, Luke i. 76; Isa. lviii. 1.

8. The Feast of Tabernacles is also called the Feast of Ingathering. It commemorates trials and changes past, and toil rewarded by the gathering of its fruits. As the Day of Trumpets immediately preceded and prepared for the Day of Atonements, the Feast of Tabernacles followed that day of deep and awful significance—as it were the rejoicing in the results which Faith embraced and made her own. As the Day of Atonements was the greatest of days in its sadness, the Fast of fasts, the Day of the Festival of Tabernacles, was the greatest of days in its joys, it was the Feast of feasts. Philo calls it "the greatest of Feasts." It is the Feast, as by pre-eminence sacred and happy. The tabernacles of the jubilant people were made of fresh, leafy boughs, as remembrancers of the sole shelter which their fathers could find when they were fugitives from Egypt. The Exodus itself was the fruit of a long period of Providential toil and pain. But the Festival commemorated also the ingathered fruits of the earth, the exodus, the outcome of man's toil and pain.

The Passover is the Festival of the Church's birth, the Pentecost is the Festival of her adult endowment, the Feast of the Tabernacles points to the great Festival of her finished Redemption in Heaven, the Redemption which waited on the Day of Atonement for the world. The wilderness is passed; the changing booth, the hasty tabernacle has been exchanged for the eternal mansions; the full ripe fruit has been gathered in; the eternal rejoicing has been entered on. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goes forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

9. The Sabbath Year, Lev. xxv. 2, took place every seventh year. It was a year of Sabbaths. It applied to the year the same general principles which held good of the weekly Sabbath and its typology. The people were to allow the land to be still, and thus were to be taught implicit trust in God. They were to be taught tenderness to the poor, and regard even to the beasts of the field. Some Jewish and some Christian writers have connected with this Festival the idea of a Sabbatic Year of the World. The connecting of the Sabbath Year specially with the manumission of servants has arisen from a failure to notice that the Hebrew servant was to be released after six years, dating from any time at which his servitude began, Ex. xxii. 2; Deut. xv. 12.

10. The Year of Jubilee followed the seven sevens of the seventh years, Lev. xxv., xxvii. It was the great year of rest, following on the seventh Sabbath Year. It was a time of holy gladness, of music, of family reunion, of restitution and restoration of what had been forfeited and lost, of release from burdens and slavery, of free forgiveness, and of bounteous giving. It was meant to symbolize the acceptable year of the Lord, the time of the Advent of Christ, and that time of consummation when all Sabbaths of the week and year shall find their antitype in the Jubilee of Heaven.

The Feast of Tabernacles shadows heavenly joy in its relation to the past, the Year of Jubilee shows what it is in itself, eternal rest from all ill, eternal immunity from all burdens and sorrows, eternal gladness. The Year of Jubilee is the Year of Restoration—of Paradise Restored. The inheritance once forfeited is resumed for ever. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." "The ransomed of the LORD shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

IX. THE TYPICAL EVENTS; OR, HISTORICAL TYPES.

1. THAT "history repeats itself," simply means that God acts in unity and harmony with Himself; that His plans widen, but that there are no breaks in them. The first appearance of a thought of God in history, gives us a type of what will recur in innumerable combinations, but in unchanged essence and principle, again and again, till time shall be no more. Hence, history, which relatively to the past is prophecy fulfilled, is relatively to the future prophecy unfulfilled, just as a blossom is a bud fulfilled, and a fruit unfulfilled. Moses was the greatest of prophets, not in the number of his prophecies, in the narrower sense of the word prophecy, but as the giver, beyond all men of the prophetic olden time, of the facts, the principles, the laws and institutions which shadow the future. The most prophetic part of the Old Testament is the Pentateuch, and the most prophetic book of the Pentateuch is Genesis—it is the great nursery for the primal plants of all prophecy and of all history. All prophecy and all history grow out of the Book of Genesis. It is, as its title and place would lead us to expect, the Book of all beginnings.

2. The Creation of the World has furnished suggestions almost ample enough in themselves for a System of Christian Divinity. It presents many images of the New Creation in individuals and in the world, or the Regeneration, whether that word means the total work of the New Dispensation, or the miniature of that work which the Holy Spirit traces in each believer. The original Creation has also been used as a type of the Resurrection of man, both spiritual and bodily.

The first Creation was the direct work of God; all the persons of the Trinity were active in it, each after his own distinctive character; it was followed by order out of chaos, light from darkness, life from deadness; it moved in beautiful progression, each step preparing for the next; it ended in the production of man in God's image. It was attended by God's benediction, and succeeded by His Sabbath rest, on a world with no taint of sin or sorrow on it. All these are images of the New Creation in its beginnings, advance, and consummation.

3. The planting of the Garden of Eden, or Paradise, has always been among the favorite themes of typical suggestions. Augustine makes Paradise the "indicator of the future of the Church. Paradise is the Church; its four rivers are the four Gospels; its fruit trees the saints; the fruits are their holy works; the tree of life is the Holy of Holies, even Christ; the tree of knowledge of good and evil is the free will of man." In the Church, as in Paradise, we hear the voice of God and He walks with us, we have the purest joys, the sweetest privileges given to man on earth. But the Church militant is but a prophecy of the Church triumphant, and Paradise is a type of the Church in heaven, yet more than of the Church on earth. Paradise is an image of the sinless beauty and joy of the world of the Redeemed. There are the true Tree of Life, and the river of God, the streams of whose living waters burst forth from beneath the throne of God, and the Lamb, Rev. ii, 7; xxii. 1. There the incarnate God reveals His presence for ever among His saints.

4. The building of the Ark presents many points of parallel with the Christian Church. Like the Ark, the Church is designed to save God's children from the flood of wrath which sweeps over the world of the godless; in the Church the saved form one family; the Church is planned and constructed by divine guidance, on the model divinely prescribed; the storms which destroy all the evil only ensure the Church's rising higher and resting more securely above all peril—"the gates of hell shall not prevail against her." Like the Ark, the Church is sailless and rudderless, yet moves and is guided, ever aright, by God's hand of Providence and Grace. The world of the godless which is not willing to be saved by the Ark yet often bears a part in building it—they that deride it shall yet seek, too late and in vain, to be saved by it. Wealth and genius and skill have been made tributary to the work of the Church; but they who possessed them were often led by an overruling Providence to use them for the welfare of others, neglecting their own.

5. The appearing of Jehovah in the Burning Bush, Ex. iii. The consummation is in the incarnation of Christ, where the lowly humanity shone unconsumed, in the glorious brightness of the Deity.

6. The sojourn of Israel in Egypt presents many interesting analogies to the Church. In distress and oppression Israel was not forgotten. All things were ripening for its redemption, and when the hour of God's deliverance came, the line was drawn between Egypt, the rich and proud oppressor, and Israel the lowly. Darkness was thick over the one, light in all the dwellings of the other; the angel of death smote the one, and passed over the other; the first-born of the one died, from the king's palace to the beggar's wayside, in the house of the other the parents and the first-born were rejoicing in the coming deliverance. In the Exodus the one stood stricken and trembling, the other went forth with a high hand, singing, the Lord hath triumphed gloriously!

7. The movement of the Pillar of Cloud and of Fire, Ex. xiii., was a type of Christ as God hidden and revealed in humanity, guiding His Church through the wilderness to the Land of Rest. The pillar of cloud and fire was associated with the angel of the divine presence, or the manifested Jehovah. It was cloud by day to temper the glare; it was fire by night to relieve the darkness. From it the Lord looked forth to trouble His enemies, and to comfort His people. It went before His people as their guide through the wilderness. They went in safety only as they followed it. Like our Lord it presented a union of the natural with the divine; the Deity dwelt within the cloud of humanity. God veils and reveals himself in clouds. At the Transfiguration, a cloud was around our Lord and His heavenly visitants. At His Ascension, a cloud received Him out of their sight, and He shall come again in the clouds of heaven, and we shall be caught up into the clouds to meet our Lord in the air. The luminous cloud is the special token of the divine presence.

8. The Crossing of the Red Sea, Ex. xiv., was a type of Holy Baptism, which sunders and consecrates, which separates the Church from the world. "All our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea," 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. It was their baptism out of slavery into national life.

9. The falling of the Manna is directly connected with Christ as given for the life of the world, both by our Lord Himself and by St. Paul.

In John vi. 32 and the following verses, our Lord contrasts the giving of Himself as the antitype and verity, with the giving of the Manna as the type and shadow. St. Paul, 1 Cor. x. 3, says: "Our fathers did all eat the same spiritual meat." In the Manna, which in virtue of its typical relation is "spiritual meat," they had the type of which Christ is the reality. He is the bread of God "which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." "Manna," says an old divine, "tasted like honey. Thus is Christ to them that love Him, honey to the heart, melody to the lips [mel in corde, in ore melos]." The Manna represents the Church as a thing of life, yet of lowliness. The bush which burned but was not consumed, imaged the Church of the past and of the future, which, amid the fire of tribulation, in which God permits His people to be tested, is not destroyed. Our God is a fire—consuming to His enemies, purifying and illumining to His children. To the good and the bad alike come sorrows; but while the sorrow of the world worketh death, the light affliction which is but for a moment works a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory for those who look in faith at the things which are unseen to the natural eye, 2 Cor. iv. 17.

But the mode of God's manifestation in this case was in keeping with His whole manner of self-revelation. The invisible God appears in the visible, the Creator in the created, the exalted in the lowly; and in this broader scope of construction the burning bush is a shadow of that whose perfect has also been compared to the Gospel, to the Eucharist, and to the joys of Eternal Life, Rev. ii. 17.

10. The Smiting of the Rock, Ex. xvii. "Our fathers did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed the 1: and that rock was Christ," 1 Cor. x. 4. Type of the Smitten Rock of our Salvation, the source of our life, of the water of which he who drinketh thirsts no more, John vi. 35. He was smitten by the Law—"the law was given by Moses." To the stroke flowed forth responsive the blessings of salvation, "Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ."

11. The Budding of Aaron's Rod and its being laid in the Ark, Num. xvii., Heb. ix. 4, typified Christ in His lowliness, Isa. xi. 1, and in His rejection, Ps. xxii. 16, and then in the glory of His return to life; His exaltation to eternal triumph, "believed on in the world;" His perpetual appearing in heaven, "received up into glory."

12. The making and Lifting up of the Brazen Serpent, Num. xxi. 9, points first to the nature and source of sin, of the deadly wound inflicted by this old Serpent, whose head was to be bruised by the Seed of the woman. The healing Serpent was appointed by God; it bore an external similarity to that which did the harm, as Christ appeared in the "likeness of sinful flesh," and was made sin and a curse for us. The remedy was simple: It was only look and live. It was meant for all: "Every one that is bitten;" "God so loved the world;" "Our Lord Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man." Its power was the power of a divine promise offered to every one, and actually received in its benefits by all who believed—"When he looketh upon it, he shall live." "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life," John iii. 14, 15. The Symbol of Humiliation became the Standard of Triumph. The Cross of Christ is the glory of His Church.

13. The construction of Solomon's Temple. While the Temple differed in no essential respect from the Tabernacle in its typology, it yet in certain respects presented the same points at a more advanced stage. In some measure, the Temple brought forth more perfectly the idea of the finished structure of God, the Church triumphant, fixed and secure. "In the erection of the Temple," says Gerhard, "no sound of axe or hammer was heard: and it is by the Word and the Cross in this life, the living stones are made ready to be laid in the heavenly Jerusalem"—the sounds that indicate trial and fitting will not be heard there. The preparations of Providence often seem full of agitation; its consummations are made in calm. Fire, Earthquake and Storm, the bowing of the cedars, the rocking of the mountain, the rending of the rocks, go before, the still small voice comes after, but God comes in the voice. God uses the former to prepare the way for the latter.

X. THE SECONDARY PURPOSES OF THE CEREMONIAL LAW.

1. We have seen that Christ is the supreme end of the Ceremonial Law. Its grand object was to foreshadow Him, and to prepare the way for His work. But the Law had other objects, subordinate yet real; relatively small yet absolutely great; "not glorious" with respect to the "glory that excelleth," yet with respect to all other glory full of brightness.
2. The Ceremonial Rites bound together the people of God, brought them into public assemblies for common worship, and knit them closely together by the most sacred ties. There is no external bond like that of common religious usages.
3. They were marks of the profession of one Religion, the confession of one Faith. They distinguished the Mosaic polity from that of all other nations. These Ceremonies were a hedge of separation, "a middle wall of partition," between Israel and the Gentiles with their idolatrous rites. "What nation is there so great that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?" "He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them," Deut. iv. 8; Ps. cxlvi. 20; Eph. ii. 14.
4. They reminded men of sin, and continually and earnestly warned them of its various kinds, its guilt and punishment, Heb. x. 3. The Ceremonial Law was the divine means of profoundly moral ends.
5. They were a solemn and constant test and exercise of obedience toward God. They helped to educate the chosen race in the worship of God, and in a true, heartfelt service of Him.
6. They were disciplinary, involving a correction of the tendency of the people to fall into the idolatrous habits of the surrounding nations, Deut. xii. 30. They were at once as a fire to purify and make the nation ductile, and as the mould into which the metal was to flow and be set.
7. They were the means of support to the Ministry, by the portion of the sacrifices, the tithes, and other forms of provision for their needs.
8. Rightly used, they excited the expectations, quickened the desires, and prepared the heart of the people for the advent of the "Mighty God, the Father of the era to come, the Prince of Peace." The Law was their Schoolmaster as it is ours, to lead them, as it leads us, to Christ, that they, even as we, might be justified by Faith. "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe," Gal. iii. 19-22.

XI. ABROGATION OF THE CEREMONIAL LAW.

1. THE Jew maintains that the Ceremonial Law is still in force—that the something it shadows has not come to take its place. The whole typical explanation given by the Christian Church involves that the Ceremonial is fulfilled in Christ, and is therefore abrogated by Him.
2. The Ceremonial Law shows by its very nature that it is capable of change and of abrogation. The Moral Law is written in man's nature as a responsible being, and in its essential character is unchangeable. It is the Law of all time, the Law of heaven as well as of earth, of angels as well as of men, the Law for God, as well as the Law of God. It is that Law the complete conformity with which is the revelation of God's absolute holiness. It is not imposed on God, but is the necessary presupposition of His perfection. Ceremonial Laws are but legal means, deriving their authority from the will of the giver, requiring changes as circumstances change, and necessarily ceasing altogether as soon as the circumstances which originated them cease altogether.
3. The circumstances which originated the Ceremonial Law, and which made it so necessary and useful, have entirely ceased. It was to furnish a shadow of Christ and His kingdom, and Christ and His kingdom have come. It was to separate Israel wholly from the idolatry of the Pagan religion, and this, its work, has been done for ages. Israel, once insanely Polytheistic in its tendencies, is now inflexibly Monotheistic. Whatever of good the Old Dispensation bore in it, is reproduced far more perfectly in the New. With the passing away of the reason, passes away the Law itself.

4. The performance of the Ceremonial Law has long ceased to be possible. The persons, the places, the forms of it are lost. The Holy Land is held by the oppressors of the Jews, the Temple is gone, the Jewish race is scattered over the world. The tribe of Levi cannot be distinguished from other tribes, still less the family of Aaron be sundered from the other families as the Ceremonial Law requires. It is true the Jewish race have been driven from the Holy Land before—but their dispersion was but for a limited and stated time—this dispersion has existed for many centuries. The distinctions were not effaced which were necessary, now they have vanished. Is it said the Jews are yet to return to their old home to restore the ancient ritual? We shall not enter into the question of the unfulfilled prophecies connected with this great and profoundly interesting race, but would ask the thoughtful Jew one question: Is it conceivable that the Jewish race, if they had Palestine in possession, would, if they could, restore the minutiae of the Levitical ceremonies? Is there one Jew in a thousand so little influenced by the growth of religious ideas, that he could go back to animal sacrifices, and the burdensome details of the Mosaic Ceremonial Law? The cultivated Jewish thought of the world, if it does not coincide with the Christian thought, moves at least in parallelism with it. The Jew is nowhere so much at home as he is in the lands of Biblical Christianity, and if Palestine were thrown open to the Jews to-day, but with the understanding that they who returned to it were to conform strictly to the Levitical Law, Palestine in a little time would have fewer Jews in it than it has now.

5. The Old Testament itself teaches that the Ceremonial Law is to be abrogated, Ps. cx. 3, 4. See Heb. vii. 11, 12; Jeremiah xxxi. 32; Dan. ix. 27.

6. The New Testament teaches the same doctrine repeatedly, Gal. iv. 1-3; Eph. iv. 14; Col. ii. 14.

7. The New Testament economy is so diverse from the Old, that the distinctive ceremonies of the Old cannot be retained in the New, even by way of memorial.

8. Many of the greatest Jewish divines have confessed that when Messiah comes he will abrogate the Ceremonial Law.

9. But while the Ceremonial Law is abrogated as law, it still is rich in teaching and suggestion. It is still profitable for doctrine. If we cannot use the lock without the key, neither can we use the key without the lock. We must study the New Testament to understand the Old; we must study the Old Testament to understand the New.

10. The ceremonial law, so far as it rests on principles which are unchanged by time, the broad general principles of all worship, may furnish useful hints to be employed wisely in the exercise of Christian liberty, by the people of God through all ages. Its reverence, its care of God's prescription, its humility, its sense of sin, its confession of need of atonement, its self-sacrifice and personal consecration, its order, propriety, and richness of significance,—these are lessons, in perpetual freshness, and are "written for our learning." If we love it most for Christ's sake, yet should we love it no little for its own.

11. There is a sadness which lingers around fallen glory, though that glory, in its own nature, was destined to a necessary decay. The Mosaic Economy is the most majestic, the most wonderful, of superseded things. It was, as the Apostle well styles it, "glorious." The name of Moses is one of the greatest in the records of the race. He lifted a race of slaves to such a freedom as the world had not conceived of: he gave, to the demoralized victims of lawless tyranny, a law which has been the wonder of all ages. He so preserved and fixed the result of his grand work, that the race which bears the impress of it has shown the intensest moral tenacity in the annals of nations. Every Jew is a living monument of the amazing power of the Mosaic Statutes. A race which at first seemed destined to lose itself in the morass of the surrounding idolatry, now holds its wonderful existence, like a stream of fresh water which flows through the Ocean without mingling with its current.

So completely does Moses prepare the way for his Divine successor, that in the actual order of Providence, it is no extravagance to say, No Moses, no Christ, as it is supremely true, also, that, had there been no Christ in God's plan there would have been no Moses. Moses and Christ are correlates in Redemption. Hence, in the New Testament the name of Moses is one which is treated with profound reverence. In the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Apostle, as he shows that Christ, as He is above Angels, must be in person God: so he shows that, as He is in office above Moses, He must be in office Messiah. "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession Jesus Christ, who was faithful to him that appointed (him that made him), as also Moses was faithful in all his house. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house, hath more honor than the house; for every house is builded by some man, but he that hath built all things is God. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a SON over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end."

"CONSIDER the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession." On that matchless One, who blends the glory of the heavenly with the charm of a perfect human sympathy, who is very God of very God, and very man, born of the Virgin to our low estate—on him fix the eyes of your understanding. Gaze on Him till the light of His form brings you within its own transfiguring power, till the applying Spirit transforms you by his light and changes you into the same image from glory to glory.

Ponder with the heart what has been opened to the mind. Christ justifies a faith which banishes every fear. From Him springs a comfort which rises above all sorrows. What has grief of pain, what has death to appall him who can say, Christ is mine, and I am His? His is a Love "deeper than the Grave in which He lay, higher than the Heavens to which He rose, ancient as Eternity and undying as the Souls He redeemed."

Point others to Christ. Bring to His feet the sinners whom He has so tenderly loved. Guide your life by His life. Build on Him, live by Him, live for Him. Know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. For Him the ages waited and ripened. For Him they have expanded, in the time which has followed His coming. All that does not bow before His sceptre will be broken by it. Let it not be in vain for us, that such a Saviour was foreshadowed, that such a Saviour has been given. Woe be to us if, as we stand on the Holy Mount on which the Law and the Prophets bow before our Lord Jesus Christ, we turn a deaf ear to that voice which comes from the excellent glory—"THIS IS MY BELOVED SON, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASED."

REV. JOHN H. MORRIS.

ABILENE (ab-i-le'ne), a small canton situated among the mountains of Antitabanus, west of Damascus, of which Lysanias was tetrarch in the time of John the Baptist. Abila was the capital.

ACCAD (ak'kad), "fortress," one of the five cities in the "land of Shinar," or Babylonia, founded by Nimrod in the beginning of his kingdom; identified by Jerome with Nisibis in the north of Mesopotamia.

ACELDAMA (ak-el'da-ma), "field of blood," a place just without the walls of Jerusalem, south of Mount Zion, so called because it was bought with the thirty pieces of silver for which CHRIST was betrayed, previously called the Potters' Field, being a place whence they obtained their clay, Matt. 27:7.

ACHMETHA (ak-me'thah), the ECBATANA of classical writers, the capital of Media, built by Dejoces or Phraortes, and surrounded with seven walls, Ezra 6:2. Its site is occupied by Hamadan, in Persia.

ACHOR (a'kor), a valley near Jericho.

ADRAMYTTIUM (ad-ra-mit'ti-um), a maritime city of Mysia, in Asia Minor, opposite the island Lesbos, and about eighty miles north of Smyrna. It was famous for its shipping trade. It is now called Adramyt, with about fifteen hundred houses.

ADRIA (a'dri-ah), the sea on the east of Italy, called the Adriatic, or the Gulf of Venice. In Paul's time it embraced that part of the Mediterranean between Crete and Sicily.

ADULLAM (a-dul'lam), a city in the lowlands of Judah, southwest of Jerusalem. It was a small town for four hundred years after CHRIST, but even its ruins cannot now be found. The Cave of Adullam, in which David and his men concealed themselves from Saul, some identify with the Cave of Khureitum, near Bethlehem.

ADUMMIM (a-dum'mim), "red or bloody," a mountain and city of Jericho, in the tribe of Benjamin; infested with robbers, Josh. 15:7; 15:17. The parable of the Good Samaritan is founded on it, Luke, 10:30-36.

AI (a'i), "ruin," a city near Bethel, about ten miles north of Jerusalem, called also Aiath, Isa. 10:28, and Aija, Neh. 11:31. Its ruins are still seen on top of a ridge east of Bethel. 2. A city of the country of Moab, taken and pillaged by the Chaldeans, Jer. 49:3.

AIN, "a fountain," the great fountain of the Orontes now called Ain el-Asu, about ten miles southwest of Riblah.

AKRABBIM (ak-rab'bim), "scorpions," called also Maaleh-Akrabbim, Scorpion-height, a chain of hills on the southern border of Palestine, close to the valley of the Arabah.

ALEXANDRIA (al-ex-an'dre-a), a once famous city in Egypt, near the western branch of the Nile, where it flows into the Mediterranean; it derived its name from Alexander the Great, who founded it about 332 B. C. It was one of the most flourishing and celebrated cities of the world, the metropolis of the kings of Egypt, and long the grand seat of commerce and wealth. The modern Alexandria is built on the ruins of the ancient city, about one hundred and twenty-five miles north of Cairo. It is the seat of an extensive and increasing commerce. Its population, of various nationalities, is above 40,000.

AMPHIPOLIS (am-fip'o-lis), "around the city," a city of European Turkey, formerly the capital of Macedonia, situated on the river Strymon, which nearly surrounded it, from whence it took its name. It was distant about thirty-three miles from Philippi. It was founded about 470 years before CHRIST; the Turks call it Emboli. It was called Popolia in the time of the Byzantine empire. A village of about one hundred houses now occupies part of its site.

ANATHOTH (an'a-thoth), "answers"—i. e., to prayer—a city of Benjamin, about three Roman miles north from Jerusalem; was the birth-place of Jeremiah. Now Anata, a village of fifteen or twenty houses.

ANTIOCH (an'te-ok), the capital of Syria, on the banks of the river Orontes, about thirty miles from where it falls into the Mediterranean, and about one hundred and eighty miles north of Sidon, and three hundred north of Jerusalem. It was built by Seleucus Nicator, B. C. 301, and was the residence of the Syrian kings, the Seleucidae. It was ranked the third city of the earth. The term Christians was first used here. From it Paul started on his missionary journeys. It was the scene of the birth and earlier labors of the celebrated Greek Father Chrysostom. It has been besieged and plundered no fewer than fifteen times, and has been visited by four earthquakes, in one of which 25,000 persons are said to have perished. It is little else than a heap of ruins.

ANTIOCH OF PISIDIA, a city of Asia Minor, about twenty-five miles northeast of Seleucia, in which Paul and Barnabas preached the Gospel, Acts 13:14.

APPII-FORUM (ap'pe-i-fo'rum), a town on the western coast of Italy, on the great road (Via Appia) from Rome to Brundisium, about forty-three Roman miles south of Rome. Here Paul met a band of Christians from Rome, when he was on his way thither as a prisoner.

AR (ar), "a city," the capital of Moab, south of the river Arnon, and on the east of the Dead Sea. The ruins bear the name of Rabba.

ARABAH (ar'a-bah), "desert," the name given to the whole Jordan valley down to the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, a distance in all of about one hundred and fifty miles. The name is found only once in the English Bible, where it is the name of a district in Benjamin, called also Beth-Arabah.

ARAD (a'rad), "a wild ass," a city in the south of Palestine.

ARAM (a'ram), "high region." See SYRIA.

ARARAT (ar'ar-at), the name of a portion of Armenia, on the "mountains" of which the ark rested after the flood. It is nowhere in Scripture given as the name of a mountain. The "mountains" of Ararat is the range which rises in the valley of the Aras, the ancient Araxes, and is terminated in two peaks, the loftiest of which rises to a height of 17,750 feet above the level of the sea. The expression, "the land of Armenia," in 2 Ki. 19:37 and Isa. 38: 38, is in the original Ararat. Jeremiah, 51:27, speaks of Ararat as one of the countries of the north—i. e., north of Babylon.

ARGOB (ar'gob), "stony" or "stone-heap," a district in the half-tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, on the east of the Lake of Galilee, originally ruled over by Og, Deut. 4:4, 13. It extended twenty-two miles from north to south, and fourteen from east to west. It contained sixty walled towns; "and though a vast majority of them are deserted, they are not ruined."

ARIMATHEA (ar-e-ma-the'a), "the double heights," a city of Judah, the birth-place of Joseph the counselor, in whose sepulchre our LORD was laid. Some have identified it with Ramleh.

ARMAGEDDON (ar-ma-ged'don), "the mountain of Megiddo," a name used emblematically for a place of great slaughter and mourning, Rev. 16:16, allusion being made to that great battle-field, the plain of Esdraelon, on the southern border of which stood Megiddo. See JEZREEL.

ARMENIA (ar-me'nyā), "high-land," a large country of Western Asia on the north of Mesopotamia, and on the east of Cappadocia. It is generally mountainous, and gives rise to the Tigris and the Euphrates. It is four hundred and thirty miles from east to west, and three hundred from north to south. It is divided into fifteen provinces, of which Ararat is the central. It was reduced to a Persian province by Cyrus. The Armenians profess Christianity, but in a very corrupted state, having departed very far from the purity of the Gospel both in doctrine and worship. Armenia is now subject to the Turks. In 2 Ki. 19:37, and Isa. 37:38, the Hebrew word Ararat is rendered by the word Armenia. This country is identical with Togarmah.

ARNON (ar'non), "noisy," a small river east of the Dead Sea, the boundary between Moab and the Amorites, rises in the highlands of Moab and falls into the Dead Sea.

AROER (ar'o-er), "heath," a city on the north bank of the river Arnon. It is now a ruin called Arair. 2. A city near Rabbath-Ammon, and another in Judah, 1 Sam. 30:28.

ARPAD (ar'pad), or ARPHAD, "support," a city of Syria.

ARVAD (ar'vad), "wandering," or ARADUS (a-ra'dus), a small island and city off the north coast of Phœnicia. It is now called Ruad, and has about 3,000 inhabitants.

ASHDOTH-PISGAH (ash'doth-piz'gah), a place near the base of Mount Pisgah. It is called the Springs of Pisgah, Deut. 4:49.

ASIA (āzh'ya), one of the quarters into which geographers have divided the earth, has been the scene of the most wonderful events in the history of man; here the human race was created, the Jews were planted, the Sacred Scriptures chiefly indited, the SON of GOD accomplished our redemption, and from it the Gospel was diffused through the world. Asia, mentioned in the New Testament, for the word is not found in the Old Testament, is usually divided into two parts, Asia Major and Asia Minor. Asia Major comprehends by far the most extensive eastern parts of the continent: Canaan, Assyria, Syria, Arabia, Persia, Mesopotamia, Armenia and Chaldea. Asia Minor, in the form of a peninsula, is bounded on the north by the Euxine Sea, on the south and west by the Mediterranean Sea, and on the east by Armenia, etc. It is about nine hundred and sixty miles in length, and four hundred in breadth; and the chief divisions of it are Mysia, Lydia, Caria, Lycia, Pamphylia, Pisidia, Galatia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Pontus, Cappadocia, Cilicia and the islands of Cyprus and Rhodes. As used in Acts 2:9; 6:9; 19:10, 22, 26, 27; 2 Tim. 1:15; 1 Pet. 1:1, the name applies to Proconsular Asia, comprehending only Phrygia, Mysia, Caria and Lydia.

ASKELON (as'ke-lon), "migration," one of the "fenced cities" of the Philistines, upon the coast of the Mediterranean, between Gaza and Ashdod. Is now desolate as predicted, Zech. 9:5; Zeph. 2:4.

ASSOS (as'sos), a seaport in Mysia, in the northwest of Asia Minor, about twenty miles south of Troas. Its ruins are still distinguishable.

ASSYRIA (as-sir'ya). The country of Assyria and the Assyrian empire are to be distinguished. The empire comprehended Babylon and Mesopotamia. In its widest sense the Assyrian empire comprehended all the countries which lay between the Mediterranean and the Indus.

ATHENS (ath'enz), "City of Athene" [i. e., Minerva], the capital of Attica, Greece, situated about forty-six miles east of Corinth. It was founded by Cecrops, about 1,556 years before CHRIST, and, therefore, it is one of the most ancient remaining in the world. It was the most eminent in population, wealth, magnificence, commerce, literature, philosophy, oratory, poetry and the fine arts. Its idolatry was notorious; and the number of Athenian gods is reckoned by Hesiod at 30,000. Petronius said it "was easier to find a god in Athens than a man." Here Paul preached. It was governed by the Romans before the time of CHRIST; and in the fourth and fifth centuries it was pillaged by the Goths. From A. D. 1455, for a number of years, it was under the sway of the Turks. It suffered dreadfully in the war between the Greeks and the Turks, yet it bravely sustained three sieges—twice in the year 1822, and finally in 1826; and now it is free, the capital of the kingdom of Greece. Its population is about 40,000.

The Acropolis and the Areopagus, or Mars Hill. The former was the citadel of Athens, and was remarkable for the number of important edifices that crowded its summit and sides. The latter was a small eminence, a little to the northwest of the Acropolis. It was so called in consequence, as it was said, of Mars having been the first person tried there, for the murder of Halirrhothius, son of Neptune. The members of the Council or Courts were called Areopagites.

ATTALIA (at-ta'li-a), a seaport town of Pamphylia, in Asia Minor, situate about thirty miles southwest of Perga.

AVEN (a'ven), "iniquity," a city of Egypt eastward of the river Nile, elsewhere called On or Heliopolis.—See ON.

AZOTUS (a-zo'tus), Acts 8:40, the Greek form of Ashdod (ash'dod), one of the five cities of the Philistines, midway between Joppa and Gaza. Here was the temple of Dagon in which the Philistines deposited the ark. Here Philip was found, after baptizing the eunuch, Acts 8:40; it is now an insignificant village called Esdud.

BABYLON (bab'e-lon), "confusion, mixture," in Hebrew and Chald. Babel, the capital of the country called Shinar in Genesis, and in the later Scriptures Chaldea. Besides its application to the city of Babylon, the name (in Heb.) is also used to denote the district of Chaldea lying between the Tigris and the Euphrates, as well as Babylonia, the province of the Assyrian empire, and also Persia, Ezra 5:13. The city of Babylon was the capital of the province of Babylon, and of the Chaldean Empire. It was one of the most magnificent cities that ever existed. It was built by Nimrod, the great-grandson of Noah, in the place where the tower of Babel had been. This city was an exact square, built on a large plain, and was fifty-six miles in circumference, fourteen miles on each side. The walls were eighty-seven feet thick, three hundred and thirty-five in height, with one hundred gates of solid brass, twenty-five on each side. It had fifteen streets crossing one another at right angles, each one hundred and fifty feet wide; and the whole city contained six hundred and seventy-six squares. The famous hanging gardens were a succession of terraces, raised on arches. The river Euphrates ran through this city. The inhabitants became remarkable for their superstitious, lewd and debauched practices. Darius, king of Persia, demolished its gates and walls, B. C. 538; Xerxes pillaged the temple of Belus in the year 478; Alexander the Great intended to renew it, but he soon died, 323; Seleucus Nicanor, carried away about 500,000 people to a new city called Seleucia on the Tigris; a few people continued till the first century of CHRIST; but in the second it was deserted, and fell into ruins. The ruins of this once famous city are found near the modern village of Hillah, on the west bank of the Euphrates, about fifty miles south of Bagdad. The most remarkable of all the mounds found in that region is the vast ruin called Birs Nimrud, about six miles southwest of Hillah, and which is supposed by some to represent the tower of Babel. The mound called Babel is supposed to represent the temple of Belus; the mound of the Kasr ("palace") the great palace of Nebuchadnezzar; and the mound of Amram the "hanging gardens." There are many other great masses of ruins on both sides of the Euphrates not yet fully explored.

BASHAN (ba'shan), "fruitful, or light, sandy soil," a district east of Jordan reaching from Gilead to Hermon; high hill of, called the hill of God, Ps. 68:15; its fruitfulness and rich pastures are especially noticed repeatedly, the district is now called Hauran. The cities of Bashan remain almost in the state in which they were in the days of Og.

BEEROTH (be'e-roth), "wells," a city of the Gibeonites ten miles north of Jerusalem; near it are the remains of a church built by the empress Helena. It is now called el-Bireh, a village of 700 inhabitants.

BEERSHEBA (be-er'she-ba), "well of the oath," the name of a city, and also of a well, at the southern extremity of the Holy Land; first mentioned in the history of Abraham, who planted a grove there.

BEREA (be-re'a), "heavy, weighty," a city of Macedonia, lying about twenty miles west of Thessalonica. It now bears the name of Verria, in Roumelia, and has a population of about 20,000.

BESOR (be'sor), "cold," a brook in the south-west corner of Canaan, falling into the Mediterranean a few miles to the south of Gaza, supposed to be that in which the Ethiopian eunuch was baptized, Acts 8: 26, etc.

BETHABARA (beth-ab'a-ra), in the best MSS. Bethany, a place on the Jordan east of Jericho where John baptized, John 1: 28.

BETHANY (beth'a-ne), "house of dates," a village of some note, situated on the east side of the Mount of Olives, about fifteen furlongs (two Roman miles) from Jerusalem, was the residence of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, where JESUS was wont to spend His few hours of relaxation in social conversation with that faithful family. Here our LORD performed His marvelous miracle of calling Lazarus back to earth after he had been four days dead; here Mary anointed CHRIST; from its vicinity CHRIST ascended into heaven. It is now but a small and poor village of about twenty families. It is called by the Arabians el' Azariyeh.

BETH-AVEN (beth-a'ven), "house of nothingness, or of iniquity," the same as—

BETHEL (beth'el), "house of GOD," a city twelve miles north of Jerusalem, originally called Luz; was first called Bethel by Jacob, Gen. 28: 19; here Jeroboam set up his idol calf, 1 Ki. 12: 28, 29; called for this reason Beth-aven, Hos. 4: 15; 10: 5. It is now a mass of ruins called Beitin. The name Bethel was also applied to a small town in the south of Judah, Josh. 12: 16; 1 Sam. 30: 27; called also Chesil, Josh. 15: 30; Bethul, 19: 4; and Bethuel, 1 Chr. 4: 30.

BETHESDA (beth-ez'da), "house of mercy," a pool on the east of Jerusalem famed in the time of CHRIST for its healing virtue, John 5: 2.

BETH-GAMUL (beth-ga'mul), "house of a camel," a city of Moab, now called Um el Jemal. "This," says Mr. Graham, "is perhaps among the most perfect of the old cities I saw. It is surrounded by a high wall forming a rectangle, which seems to enclose more space than the modern Jerusalem. The streets are many of them paved. There were some very large public buildings. The houses were some of them very large, consisting usually of three rooms on the ground-floor and two on the first story, the stairs being formed of large stones built into the house-walls and leading up outside. The doors were, as usual, of stone; sometimes folding-doors, and some of them highly ornamented. . . . Taking my rifle with me, I wandered about quite alone in the old streets of the town, entered one by one the old houses, went up stairs, visited the rooms, and, in short, made a careful examination of the whole place; but so perfect was every street, every house, every room, that I almost fancied I was in a dream wandering alone in this city of the dead, seeing all perfect yet hearing not a sound."

BETHLEHEM (beth'le-em), "house of bread," is often mentioned in the Old Testament. It was originally called EPHRATH or EPHRATAH, Gen. 35: 19; 48: 7, and whence it derived its later name is not known.

Bethlehem lies a little east of the road from Jerusalem to Hebron, about six miles from the former. There is a long lime-stone hill running east and west, with deep valleys to the north and south. The east end of this hill is bold; on the west it slopes gradually to the valley. On the sides of the hill are terraced gardens, with olive trees, fig trees and vines; and on the top to the east and north-east lies the village, now called "Beit-lahm," with a population of about three thousand. In the most easterly part is the celebrated Church of the Nativity, which owes its foundation to the empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great. It is enclosed within the walls of the convent, which is now parceled out among the Greek, Latin and Armenian monks. Two spiral staircases lead down to the cave or grotto of the nativity twenty feet below the floor of the church; in a small semi-circular niche, the exact spot marked by a star inlaid in the marble, corresponding to the point in the heavens where the star appeared to the magi, is a Latin inscription stating that JESUS was born "here." A row of lamps are always burning. Opposite is a large irregular cavity, where it is said the manger stood, a block of white marble being hollowed out in it like a manger. Here, too, is the altar of the Magi. And other lamps are suspended. There are also shown the sepulchre of the innocents, the grotto or crypt where Jerome lived and studied, and chapels dedicated to Joseph and other saints. The probability of our LORD's having been born in a cave need not here be discussed. A long current of tradition is in favor of it; and it is possible that the place where Mary took shelter, there being "no room in the inn," might be one of the caverns in the lime-stone-rock. But certainly the place where the eastern sages visited the SAVIOUR was a "house," Matt. 2: 11. The traditional scene of the angels' appearance to the shepherds is a plain about a mile away, where is a miserable village, called "Beit-Sahur;" while the traditional Well of David is half a mile to the north of the town; but, according to Dr. Robinson, there is "no well of living water" near.

There is little note of Bethlehem in the early Israelitish history; it is not even numbered in the list of the towns belonging to Judah. But Salma, or Salmon, and Hur, both of the tribe of Judah, are said to have been each "the father of Bethlehem"—that is, to have colonized it.

Here was born King David, and here he was anointed king by Samuel, and it was in consequence called "the City of David." Here, too, was born JESUS, the CHRIST. Indeed, it was in New Testament times Bethlehem had its highest honor. Thither Joseph and Mary had to repair, as descendants of David, to David's city. There, in the adjoining fields, the angelic host announced the glad tidings of the SAVIOUR's birth; and there was that wonderful event consummated, when the child JESUS was born of a mortal mother. Thither also came the Eastern sages to present their offerings; and there was the cruel slaughter of the little ones by Herod, awakening as it were, again, Rachel's lamentation. Its modern name is "Beit-lahm," with about three thousand inhabitants.

BETHPHAGE (beth-fa'ge), "house of figs," a small village situated on the east side of the Mount of Olives, nearer to Jerusalem than Bethany; JESUS lodged there. No trace of it is seen.

BETHSAIDA (beth-sa'e-da or beth-sa'dah), "house of fishing," a city of Galilee, not far from Capernaum, on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee.

BEYROOT (ba'root), or BEIRUT (bi'rut), anciently BERYTUS (be-ri'tus), a town nineteen miles north of Sidon, on the coast of Syria. It was known to the Greeks by the name Berytus, and it is supposed to be the same as Berothai or Berothah of Scripture. It was an ancient town of the Phœnicians; was captured by the Romans, B. C. 150; rose to great eminence, and Greek learning was cultivated with great success until an earthquake laid the town in ruins, A. D. 511. It changed masters repeatedly during the Crusades, and in 1291 the sultan took the city and reduced it to ashes. During the present century it has received a fresh impulse, and now bids fair to become the most important trading place on the coast.

BITHYNIA (bi-thin'ya), a province of Asia Minor, on the Euxine Sea and Propontis, about two hundred miles in length and one hundred and twenty in breadth, and separated from Europe by the narrow straits of Bosphorus. Paul designed to visit it, but was forbidden by the Holy Spirit, Acts 16: 7; Christian congregations were early formed in it. It now forms one of the districts of Turkish Anatolia. Its capital is NICE, anciently NICÆA, now called Isnik. The city is renowned in ecclesiastical annals for the great Nicene Council that convened here in A. D. 325 at the call of the emperor Constantine to settle the differences that had arisen in the Church in respect to the doctrines of Arius. It was attended by two hundred and fifty Bishops, besides a large number of Presbyters, Deacons and others from different parts of the Christian world. This Council did not give peace to the Church, as the controversy still went on.

BOZRAH (boz'rah), "enclosure," a city of Moab in "the land of Mishor," Jer. 48: 24. Identified with Busrah, a village about sixty miles south of Damascus. 2. An ancient city the capital of Edom, in Arabia Petrea, about one hundred and fifty miles south-west of the former.

CÆSAREA (sez-a-re'a), a city on the shore of the Mediterranean, about sixty miles north-west of Jerusalem, was built by Herod the Great, and named in honor of Cæsar Augustus. It bore the names of Cæsarea Stratonis, Maritime Cæsarea and Cæsarea Palestinæ, to distinguish it from Cæsarea Philippi. Herod made it his residence, and thus elevated it to the rank of civil and military capital of Judea. During the Crusades the city was taken in 1101 by King Baldwin, and retaken and destroyed in 1187 by Saladin. Only now extensive ruins, called Kaisariyeh.

CÆSAREA PHILIPPI, a city that stood between Sidon and Damascus, near the source of the Jordan. Its ancient name was Paneas. It was enlarged and embellished by Philip the tetrarch, who called it Cæsarea in honor of his emperor, Tiberius Cæsar, adding Philippi, to distinguish it from the Cæ-area on the sea-coast. It is now called Baneas, a wretched village of about forty houses. The ruins cover a wide space.

CAIRO (kî'ro), for many years the capital of Egypt, is situated near the east side of the Nile, twenty miles above the place where the river diverges into the streams that make the Delta. It is distant from Alexandria, the great port of Egypt, one hundred and thirty miles, and for several years past these cities have been connected by a railroad which is carried over the Nile by an enormous viaduct. Cairo contains upward of 400,000 inhabitants, and it occupies the second place for size, population and importance in the Turkish empire. It was founded A. D. 970.

CALAH (ka'lah), "vigorous old age," one of the most ancient of the cities of Assyria, Gen. 10:12; probably represented by the modern Nimrud.

CALNEH (kal'neh), "fortified dwelling," a city on the west bank of the Tigris, built by Nimrod, supposed to be the same as Calno, Isa. 10:9, and Canneh, whose inhabitants traded with the Tyrians, Ezek. 27:23; its site is identified by some with the modern Niffer, fifty miles south-east of Babylon.

CALVARY (kal'va-re), "skull," mentioned but once, in Luke 23, 33, as the place where CHRIST was crucified. It is a term adopted from the Vulgate version, so-called because executions were performed there, and skulls were probably left lying on the ground; or probably because it was a bare round spot like a skull. In John 19:17 it is called GOLGOTHA. The identity of the site of Calvary is doubtful.

CANA (kā'na), of Galilee, "reedy," a village about eight miles north of Nazareth, and sixteen from the lake. Jesus wrought his first miracle here. It was the native place of Nathaniel. The true site of Cana is disputed; the probability is in favor of Kana-el Jelit.

CAPERNAUM (ka-per'na-um), "city of consolation," a city on the north-west shore of the Sea of Galilee, and distant about ninety-six miles from Jerusalem. Here CHRIST preached to multitudes, and made it His chief place of residence after the people of Nazareth had attempted his life, and hence it is spoken of as "His own city." Our LORD uttered a fearful prophecy against it, on account of the unbelief of its inhabitants, notwithstanding his many mighty works performed in their midst. In CHRIST's day it was a flourishing town, Matt. 11:23.

CAPHTOR (kaf'tor), "chaplet," "knop," the original seat of the Philistines; called an isle or coast country, Jer. 47:4. Some say that it was Cappadocia, others the island of Cyprus, others the coast of the Egyptian Delta. Most probably it was Upper Egypt.

CAPPADOCIA (kap-pa-do'she-a), the most eastern province of Asia Minor, extending from Mount Taurus to the Euxine Sea, and was bounded by Pontus on the north, Lycaonia and part of Armenia on the south, Galatia on the west, and by the Euphrates on the east. It contained many rich and populous cities. It became a Roman province A. D. 17. It was subsequently wrested from the Romans by the Turks, under whose dominion it continues. A number of Christians still remain, but greatly corrupted. It is now called Amasia.

CARMEL (kar'mel), "park, garden," a city in the mountains of Judah, ten miles south-east of Hebron. 2. A celebrated mountain on the coast of the Mediterranean. It is about 1728 feet high. The range extends about twenty-eight miles, and in the south-east is connected with the mountains of Samaria. For its beauty and luxuriant forests it was compared with Bashan. Carmel is now called Jebel Mar Elias.

CENCHREA (sen-kre'a), "millet," the eastern seaport of Corinth, on the Saronic Gulf. It was distant about nine miles from Corinth.

CHIOS (ke'os), an island in the Ægean Sea, near to Lesbos, and about twelve miles from the shore of Smyrna. Now called Scio.

CHORAZIN (ko-ra'zin), one of the cities in which our LORD's mighty works were done. It lay on the western coast of the Sea of Galilee, near to Capernaum. The modern Korazy probably marks its site.

CILICIA (sil-ish'e-a), the most south-eastern province of Asia Minor, the capital of which was Tarsus.

CNIDUS (ni'dus), a city at the extreme south-west end of Asia Minor, on a promontory in Caria; its ruins are extensive, from which it is judged to have been a very important city.

CŒLE-SYRIA is the name originally given by the Greeks to the valley or hollow between Lebanon and Anti-libanus, extending probably one hundred miles between the two mountain ranges. Cœle-Syria afterward included a much wider district, comprising the tracts east of the Jordan down to the very shores of the Red Sea, and the cities of Heliopolis, Abila of Lysanias, Damascus, Gadara, Pella, Philadelphia, etc., and even Scythopolis, on the west of the Jordan.

COLOSSE (ko-los'se), "punishment," or "correction," an ancient city of Phrygia, not far from Laodicea and Hierapolis; an epistle, written probably at Rome during his first imprisonment, Acts 28:16, 30, was sent by Paul to the church in this city.

COOS (ko'os), "top," an island of the Mediterranean, one of the Sporades, near the coast of Caria, in Asia Minor. Its present name is Stanchio, and its population is about 8000.

CORINTH (kor'inth), the capital of Achaia, Greece, situated on the isthmus or neck of land which joins the Morea to Attica on the north. It was founded about 1514 years B. C., and therefore is one of the most ancient cities in the world. Its commodious haven and advantageous situation gave it a vast commerce and immense wealth. Riches introduced pride, luxury and lewdness to a vast degree. Here the fine arts were cultivated with the greatest success; and the splendid style of its public buildings gave rise to the most elaborate of the four orders of Grecian architecture. At the time of Paul's visit (A. D. 52), Gallio the Roman pro-consul, a brother of Seneca, resided here; here Paul preached, and met with much opposition; encouraged in a vision, a church was formed, to which he afterward wrote two epistles. After a long struggle with the Turks, the inhabitants obtained success in 1823, and it now belongs to the kingdom of Greece. Its former glory has passed away. The modern village of Corinto, or Gertho, rises up amid its ruins.

CRETE (kreet), one of the largest islands in the Mediterranean, to the south-east of the Morea, is about one hundred and forty miles in length, and varies from six to thirty-five miles in breadth. It was originally called the happy island, from its fertility and salubrity. Some have supposed that it is the Caphor mentioned in Scripture, Jer. 47:4; while others think that it was settled by Philistines from Egypt, some of whom afterward passed over to Palestine, and were called Caphorim, Gen. 10:14, and Cherethims, Ezek. 25:16. It contained a hundred cities or considerable towns. The present population is estimated at about 300,000, mostly Greeks. It is now called Candia.

CYPRUS (si'prus), an island of the Mediterranean, situated between Cilicia and Syria; about one hundred and forty miles in length, and varying in breadth from five to fifty miles. Some suppose it to be identical with Chittim, Num. 24:24; Dan. 11, 30. It is nearly traversed from east to west by two lofty chains of mountains, which, during winter, are covered with snow. It was celebrated in ancient times for its fertility and beauty, for its dense population, and for the gayety and licentiousness of its inhabitants. Its fruits, particularly grapes, and its corn are of a superior quality. Its modern name is Kubris.

CYRENE (si-re'ne), a city and province of Lybia, in Africa, westward of Egypt. At the present time it belongs to the Turks. Many Jews resided here.

DALMANUTHA (dal-ma-noo'tha), a place on the east side of the Sea of Galilee, mentioned only in Mark 8:10.

DALMATIA (dal-mā'she-a), a province of old Illyricum, now a province of Austria, on the eastern shore of the Adriatic. The country is two hundred miles in length and forty in breadth. Its population is about 405,000, mostly Slavi, of whom above 300,000 are Roman Catholics.

DAMASCUS (da-mas'kus), one of the most ancient and celebrated cities of Syria, and now the largest in Asiatic Turkey. It is the oldest existing city in the world, mentioned by Abraham 1910 years before CHRIST, Gen. 14:15; 15:2. Since A. D. 1517 it has been under the Turks. It is situated in the midst of an extensive plain, about two hundred miles south of Antioch, and one hundred and twenty north-east of Jerusalem, well watered and beautiful and fertile. It has many rivulets and canals connected with the large river the Abana (modern Barada), which runs through the city. Its population is now about 140,000, of whom nearly 15,000 are of the Greek Church, 6000 Jews, and the remainder are Arabs and Turks.

DECAPOLIS (de-kap'o-lis), "ten cities," a district of Palestine, situated on both sides of Jordan. Josephus says the ten cities were Damascus, Philadelphia, Raphana, Scythopolis, Gadara, Hippos, Dion, Pella, Gerasa and Otopos (or Canatha), all on the east of Jordan except Scythopolis.

DERBE (der'be), "juniper tree," a city of Lycaonia, a province of Asia Minor; Paul and Barnabas retreated to it after having been driven from Lystra.

EBAL (e'bal), "stone," a hill of Samaria from which the curses of the law were pronounced, Deut. 27: 14. See Shechem.

EBENEZER (eb-en-e'zer), "stone of help," the name which Samuel gave a stone, commemorative of God's help to Israel.

EDOM (e'dom), "red," the country of Esau, formerly called Mount Seir, and subsequently Idumea.

EKRON (ek'ron), "eradication," the most northern of the five cities of the Philistines, situated in the plain between Azotus and Jamnia. Now Akir, five miles southwest of Ramleh.

ELAH (e'lah), "terebinth or oak," the valley in which David slew Goliath; not identified.

ELAM (e'lam), "age," south of Assyria, and east of Persia Proper. Its capital was called SUSA. The name Elam was at one time given to the whole of Persia. It was called Susiana by the Greeks and Romans.

ELATH (e'lath), or ELOTH (e'lōth), "trees, terebinths," a seaport town on the eastern gulf of the Red Sea near to which the Israelites passed.

EMMAUS (em-mā'us), "hot springs," a village "threescore furlongs," or about seven and a half miles, distant from Jerusalem, memorable for CHRIST's interview with two of his disciples on their way thither.

ENDOR (en'dor), "fountain of Dor—i. e., of the age," a city four miles south of Mount Tabor; is now called Endur.

ENGEDI (en-ge'di), "the fountain of a kid," originally called Hazazon-Tamar, 2 Chr. 20: 2, the name of a city on the east side of the Dead Sea about thirty miles south-east of Jerusalem. Celebrated for the excellence of its vineyards, Cant. 1: 14.

ENON (e'non), "fountain," a place near Salim where John baptized.

EN-ROGEL (en-ro'gel), "fountain of the secret, or fuller's fountain," a spring on the south-east of Jerusalem, in the valley of the Kidron, the site of which is occupied by the "Fountain of the Virgin."

EPHESUS (effe-sus), the capital of Ionia, and in the time of the Romans of the entire province of Asia. It was situated on the south of the river Cayster about twenty-three miles north of Miletus and forty south of Smyrna. It was chiefly famed for a magnificent temple of Diana. This is said to have been four hundred and twenty-five feet long and two hundred and twenty broad. Its roof was supported by one hundred and twenty-seven pillars, sixty feet high, twenty-seven of which were curiously carved, and the rest polished. It was burned on the same day Socrates was poisoned, viz., two hundred years before CHRIST. It was rebuilt with more splendor; it was destroyed by an earthquake nineteen years after CHRIST, but it was soon rebuilt again. It had been seven or eight times destroyed before Pliny wrote. The ruins of the temple have recently been explored, and several sculptured pilasters, etc., have been exhumed. The city is now in utter ruin. A small portion of its site is occupied by the Turkish village Ayasuluk.

EPHESUS, the first mentioned of the cities to the churches of which the apocalyptic messages were addressed.

ESHCOL (esh'kol), "a bunch of grapes," a valley near Hebron from which the spies brought a bunch of grapes which required two men to carry it.

EUPHRATES (eu-frā'teez), the largest and most important of all the rivers of Western Asia. Its most frequent name in Scripture is "the river," 1 Ki. 4: 21; Ezra 4: 10, 16; Ps. 72: 8; Ex. 23: 31. It is also called "the great river," Deut. 1: 7; Josh. 1: 4. It has two sources in the mountains of Armenia. The western, called Kara-su (black river), after flowing 270 miles, joins the eastern, called the Murad, at a point about 400 miles from its source. These two tributaries thus united form the Euphrates properly so called. After many windings it is united with the Tigris at Kurnah, and at length falls into the Persian Gulf. Its entire course is about 1500 miles. It is navigable for large vessels as far up as Bassora. It flowed through ancient Babylon. Like the Nile, it overflows its banks at certain seasons of the year, which renders a great part of the country exceedingly fertile.

FAIR HAVENS, a harbor on the south side of the island of Crete.

GADARA (gad'a-ra), one of the ten cities called Decapolis, the metropolis of Peraea, about six miles from the Sea of Galilee, where CHRIST permitted the devils He had ejected to destroy a herd of swine. Its ruins are called Um-Keis.

GALATIA (ga-lā'shya). The Galatians were of Celtic origin. After various wanderings they crossed over into Asia Minor, and, about B. C. 280, settled in that part of Phrygia which was afterward called Galatia, or Gallo-Græcia. About B. C. 26, they were conquered by the Romans, and their country was made a Roman province, and together with Lycaonia placed under a Roman governor. About A. D. 266 it was overrun by the Goths, and afterward became a province of Turkey. It is now called Natolia.

GALILEE (gal'lē), "circle," "circuit," a large and fertile territory in the north of Canaan, twenty cities of which Solomon gave to Hiram, 1 Kings 9: 11; the upper part was called GALILEE OF THE GENTILES, from its containing many Gentile inhabitants; their dialect was corrupted, and hence Peter was detected by his speech. Here JESUS dwelt from His youth; from it He came to John the Baptist; here He preached and performed miracles; here He met with His followers after His resurrection; there were numerous churches in Galilee, Acts 9: 31.

GATH, "a wine-press," one of the five cities of the Philistines, has been identified with Tell es-safieh, a hill ten miles east of Ashdod.

GAZA (ga'zah), "strong," the capital and stronghold of the Philistines, situated toward the southern extremity of Canaan, and about sixty miles south-west of Jerusalem, was an important city before the time of Abraham, Gen. 10. Its modern name is Ghuzzeh, containing about 1500 inhabitants.

GERGESA (ger'ge-sa), a city on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. The country might thus be called either that of the Gadarenes or of the Gergesenes, Matt. 8: 28; Mark 5: 1.

GERIZIM (ger'e-zim), a mountain of Samaria, on which the Samaritans erected their temple, in opposition to that at Jerusalem.

GETHSEMANE (geth-sem'a-ne), "oil-press," or "oil-garden," in John 18: 1 called "a garden," in Matt. 26: 36 "a place," was a retired spot on the west of the Mount of Olives, and in the vicinity of Jerusalem. Here our Saviour, on the night before His crucifixion endured His agony and was betrayed and apprehended, Matt. 26: 36; Mark 14: 32; and previous to this, Jesus with His disciples frequented this beautiful spot, John 18: 1, 2. The probable garden consists of a small plot of ground, with a low enclosure of stones. There stand in it eight venerable-looking olive-trees, which seem as if they might have remained from time immemorial.

GIBEON (gib'e-on), "belonging to a hill," one of the four cities of the Hivites. A small village remains, called el-Jib, about six miles north-west from Jerusalem. The ruins are quite extensive.

GIHON (gi'hon), "a stream," originally the name of one of the four heads of the rivers which watered Eden, Gen. 2: 13; was also subsequently the appellation of a fountain on the west of Jerusalem, the scene of the anointing of Solomon as king.

GILBOA (gil-bo'ah), "bubbling fountains," a ridge of hills on the east of the plain of Esdraelon, which extends ten miles from east to west.

GILEAD (gil'e-ad), "the heap or mass of testimony," a range of mountains extending from the south end of the Sea of Galilee to the north end of the Dead Sea, a distance of about sixty miles, having an average breadth of about twenty miles. This region is sometimes called "Mount Gilead," Gen. 37: 25; sometimes the "land of Gilead," Num. 32: 1. In the New Testament Gilead is referred to as "Perea," and "beyond Jordan," Matt. 4: 15; John 1: 28. It abounded with trees which produced a valuable gum, called the balm of Gilead.

GILGAL (gil'gal), "a rolling away," a celebrated place on the west of Jordan, where the Israelites were circumcised.

GOMORRAH (go-mor'rah), "submersion," one of the five cities of the plain. It was next to Sodom in importance as well as in wickedness.

GOSHEN (go'shen), a very fertile province in Egypt which Joseph procured for his father and brethren, and where the Israelites dwelt during the whole of their sojourn in that country. It probably lay to the east of the Nile in Lower Egypt.

GREECE (greess), an extensive country on the south-east of Europe, and including Ionia and Asia Minor. In the Old Testament, Greece and Greeks are mentioned under the name of Javan. It was probably peopled soon after the flood by the descendants of Japheth in the line of Javan. In the days of Alexander the Greeks were masters of Egypt and Syria, the countries beyond Euphrates, and other provinces. Few countries are more favored by nature as to soil, climate and productions. In the arts and sciences Greece attained a great eminence, as also in poetry and eloquence. After a long and grievous oppression (from the fall of the Byzantine empire), the Greeks arose in 1822 against the Turks, and ultimately gained their independence. The modern Kingdom of Greece was established in 1832. In 1863 it was enlarged by the annexation of the Ionian Islands. Its population is about 1,500,000. The Greeks profess Christianity, but in a corrupted form.

HADAD-RIMMON (ha'dad-rim'mon), "the name of two Syrian idols, Hadad and Rimmon," a place in the valley of Megiddo, near to which the good king Josiah was slain, and his army routed.

HARAN (ha'ran), "mountaineer," also called Charran, Acts 7: 2, 4, was a place in Mesopotamia, or more properly in Padan-Aram. It is identified with the modern village called Harrân on the banks of the Belik, which flows into the Euphrates.

HAURAN (how'ran), "caves, cave-land," a country north-east of Canaan and south of Damascus, embracing a portion of the kingdom of Bashan. It is identical with the Greek province of Auranitis.

HAVOTH-JAIR (ha'voth-jä'r), "villages of Jair"—i. e., those which Jair took from the Ammonites, on the north of Mount Gilead.

HEBRON (he'brun), "fellowship," the oldest town in Palestine, and one of the most ancient and renowned cities of the world, called Kirjath-Arba, Jud. 1: 10; Mamre, Gen. 33: 19; 35: 37. Its modern name is el-Khulil, "the friend," with a population of about one thousand, including about sixty Jewish families.

HERMON (her'mon), or SION (si'on). See LEBANON.

HERMONITES, properly Hermons, the (three) summits of Hermon.

HESHBON (hesh'bon), "reason, intelligence," chief city of Sihon, king of the Amorites, about twenty miles east of the river Jordan. It was famous for its fish-pool, Cant. 7: 4; its ruins are still seen.

HIERAPOLIS (hi-er-rap'o-lis), a "sacred or holy city," a city of Phrygia, in Asia Minor, in the neighborhood of Colosse; here Christianity was early planted, Col. 4: 13. Its modern name is Pambuk Kalessi, about five miles north of Laodicea.

HINNOM (hin'nom), "lamentation," a deep and narrow ravine to the south and west of Jerusalem. It is first mentioned in Josh. 15: 8; 18: 16. From the time of Joshua it became the common cesspool of the city. It is said that perpetual fires were kept up in it to consume all that was combustible. It was called the "valley of the son" or "children of Hinnom," Jer. 19: 2. By the later Jews it was called Ge-Hinnom, Gehenna, as a type of the place of eternal punishment.

HOR is a conspicuous object in the Edomitish chain, rising just to the west of the city of Petra, 4800 feet above the sea level. It is entirely of sandstone, and has a double top. In the little hollow between the peaks it has been supposed that Aaron died. On the highest, the northernmost, is a small building 28 feet by 33 inside. It consists of two apartments, one below the other; in the undermost is a recess regarded as Aaron's tomb. This may be ancient; the structure above is modern. Mount Hor is now called Jebel Neby Harad.

HOREB (ho'reb). See SINAI.

ICONIUM (i-ko'nyum), the metropolis of ancient Lycaonia, in Asia Minor, situated in a beautiful and extensive plain at the foot of Mount Taurus, about fifty miles east of Lystra. Its modern name is Konie, with a population of about 30,000.

IDUMEA (id-u-me'ah), "red," the Greek form of Edom, originally called "Mount Seir," a country bordering on the Holy Land, possessed by the Edomites or descendants of Esau; was bounded on the north by the Dead Sea and Moab, and extended southward to the eastern gulf of the Red Sea.

ILLYRICUM (il-lir'i-kum), a country in Europe lying between Pannonia and the Gulf of Venice, now called Sclavonia, and about four hundred and eighty miles in length and one hundred and twenty in breadth. Dalmatia, which Titus visited, 2 Tim. 4: 10, was the southern part of this province.

ITALY, a well-known and highly-celebrated country in the south of Europe. It is bounded on the north by the Alps, which separate it from Austria and Switzerland, on the south by the Mediterranean, on the east by the Gulf of Venice, and on the west by France and the Mediterranean. It is about 700 miles in length, and from 100 to 320 in breadth. In 1859 the greater part of the peninsula was erected into the Kingdom of Italy. In 1866 Venetia was added, and in 1870 the incorporation was completed by the removal of the seat of government to Rome. Its climate is generally mild and genial, and the soil is fertile. The Roman Catholic religion is established, but under the new government a great measure of liberty is enjoyed by Protestants.

ITUREA (it-u-re'ah), a small province of Syria, in the north-east of Palestine, where Philip was tetrarch. It derived its name from Jetur (1 Chron. 1: 31), son of Ishmael; now called Jedur.

JABBOK (jab'bok), "a pouring out," a rivulet falling into the Jordan about thirty miles below the Sea of Galilee. Now called Zurka, or Blue River.

JABNEEL (jab'ne-el), "God causeth to be built," probably the same as Jabneh, called by the Greeks and Romans Jamnia. Now called Yebna, about eleven miles south of Jaffa. Its population is about 3000.

JACOB'S WELL, a well of water near the city of Shechem, at which CHRIST instructed the woman of Samaria. Still known by the same name, about half a mile south-east of Nablus, at the foot of Mount Gerizim.

JERICHO (jer'i-ko), "place of fragrance," the largest city in the valley of Jordan, about twenty miles north-east from Jerusalem. First mentioned in Num. 22: 1, and repeatedly afterward. Near it CHRIST healed two or perhaps three blind men. It is called "the city of palm trees," Deut. 34: 3; 2 Chron. 28: 15. It is now a small village called Riha or Eriha, with about two hundred inhabitants.

JERUSALEM (je-ru'sa-lem). First of the "CITIES OF THE BIBLE" in the sacred associations that cluster around its history, and precious to the Christian, not only in its associations, but more as the Divinely indicated type of the city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

It is first mentioned in the Sacred Writings by the name JERUSALEM in Joshua 10: 1, but was a city of renown long before. It is distant from the Dead Sea and Jordan valley fifteen miles, and from the Mediterranean thirty-one miles. It was called SALEM, "peace," in the time of Abraham, Gen. 14: 8; Heb. 7: 2, when Melchizedek was its king. It is so called also in Ps. 76: 2; and it was called JEBUS, "habitation" or "foundation," at the time Israel obtained possession of the Holy Land, Josh. 15: 8; 18: 28; 1 Chron. 11: 14. It seems probable, therefore, that the name Jerusalem is merely a compound of the terms Jebus and Salem. It is called "Zion," 1 Ki. 8: 1; "City of God," Ps. 46: 4; "City of the Great King," Ps. 48: 2; "the Holy City," Neh. 11: 1-18; "City of Solemnities," Isa. 33: 20.

In its most flourishing state it consisted of four parts, built on four hills; namely, Zion, Akra, Moriah and Bezetha. In fact, the whole foundation was a high rock, with four heads or hills, and with steep ascents on every side, except the north; and surrounded with a deep valley, which was embosomed with hills.

Jerusalem stands in a central position, but off the great road between Egypt and Syria. "In several respects," says Dr. Stanley, its situation is "singular amongst the cities of Palestine. Its elevation is remarkable, occasioned, not from its being on the summit of one of the numerous hills of Judea, like most of the towns and villages, but because it is on the edge of one of the highest table-lands in the country. Hebron, indeed, is higher still by some hundred feet; and from the south accordingly (even from Bethlehem) the approach to Jerusalem is by a slight descent. But from every other side the ascent is perpetual; and to the traveler approaching Jerusalem from the west or east it must always have presented the appearance beyond any other capital of the then-known world—I may add beyond any important city that has ever existed on the earth—of a mountain-city, breathing, as compared with the sultry plains of the Jordan or of the coast, a mountain-air, enthroned, as compared with Jericho or Damascus, Gaza or Tyre, on a mountain-fastness."

From the plain of Esdraelon, southward, runs a broad mountain-ridge, forming a precipitous wall to the east, but sinking gradually toward the western sea-coast. This ridge is rocky and uneven, cut up by deep ravines, generally running east or west. Some distance south of the open plain round Gibeon two such valleys begin; and on the tongue of elevated land between them stands Jerusalem. One valley, to the north-east, runs nearly due south—it is the valley of the Kidron or Jehoshaphat; the other, to the west—the valley of Hinnom—runs a while south, then, bending to the east, it joins that of the Kidron, the further course of which is to the Dead Sea. The city therefore is separated on the east, south and western sides by deep and precipitous ravines, as it were the ditches which encircle some great natural fortress. There is another ravine running from the upper level, north and south, through the city itself, dividing it into two unequal portions. This, or part of it, was called the Tyropæon. On the west of this was the upper city, or Mount Zion, on the east was Mount Moriah, also Akra or the lower city, less elevated than the western part. From this central valley a branch about halfway up extended westward; and there was another depression north of Moriah, between it and Bezetha, the new city. It was among the advantages of the position of Jerusalem that, defended as already noted to the east, south and west, by deep ravines, it had room for enlargement on the north and north-west. The heights of different points in and near the city above the level of the Mediterranean are—North-west corner of the city, 2610 feet; Mount Zion, 2537; Mount Moriah, 2429; bridge over the Kidron, near Gethsemane, 2281; Pool of Siloam, 2114; Bir Eyub, at the confluence of the Hinnom and Kidron, 1996; Mount of Olives, Church of Ascension on summit, 2724.

We may perhaps form some idea of the ancient city from the modern aspect of Jerusalem. Many of the great features of the scenery must be the same. Doubtless there was then life—stirring life—whereas now there is desolation and death. There were round the city inviting gardens and orchards, especially to the north, and in the valley of Hinnom. And there were pleasant slopes, instead of the huge mounds of rubbish from the demolition of buildings, giving a dull monotonous hue to the general view, while the houses look dingy and dilapidated. Still, the houses of the ancient city were most probably of the same character as those at present existing, with flat roofs and few windows; and probably the streets were as narrow; and the shops or bazars presented a similar appearance. And those of one trade congregated together. Thus we read of a "bakers' street," Jer. 38: 21. The line of walls and towers must in some places occupy the former sites, though both to the north, and in the upper city to the south and south-east, the extent is very much contracted, much being now bare that once was covered with houses. There were anciently many gates, and of course there must have been corresponding roads into the country. Solomon is said to have carefully paved them with black stone. But probably even then there were not above two or three of what we may call principal roads to the capital. At the gates, were open spaces, often called streets in our version (e. g. 2 Chron. 29: 4; 32: 6; Ezra 10: 9; Neh. 8: 1, 3, 16), where large assemblies could gather. For the supply of water there were pools, conduits, etc. We also find burial-places mentioned. Those of the kings were in the City of David (2 Chron. 12: 16; 14: 1 and elsewhere). But some of the sovereigns were not buried in the royal sepulchre (28: 27). Many tombs were in the valley of Hinnom, or that of the Kidron, hewn in the rock.

Doubtless Jerusalem, as it stood in its entirety, with its hills around, with its cisterns and springs, with its gardens and its sumptuous buildings, was a noble city, and it might have continued the "joy of the earth" had its people been faithful to the covenant of their God. From a hill-fortress it had grown into a metropolis. It was wealthy and populous; it was peaceful, for the God of Israel dwelt there, and splendid were the ceremonies with which His worship was celebrated by the multitudinous priests who ministered in the sanctuary. Well might all nations flow to the "mountain of the Lord's house" "established in the top of the mountains," Isa. 2: 2.

The history of Jerusalem, from the time when it was taken by the children of Judah until the time of our LORD, is given in all its remarkable details in the Sacred Scriptures—its prosperity; its sins and GOD's repeated rebukes and warnings; its sad vicissitudes—its up and downs are all depicted by the Inspired Writers. Its history, subsequently to the Scripture records, may be briefly told: About seventy years after CHRIST it was besieged, taken, sacked and burned by Titus. Above one million of the Jews perished, and ninety-seven thousand were taken prisoners; and our SAVIOUR's prediction—that it should become a heap of ruins—was fully verified. It gradually became settled again; but in the year 134 the emperor Adrian banished all the Jews, prohibiting their return on pain of death. The temple was demolished, and the site ploughed up. Several hundred years after, the city was again rebuilt. In the year 614 the Persians captured it, and ninety thousand Christians were slain. In 637 the Saracens seized it, and kept it till 1079, when the Turks became its masters. It was taken by the first Crusaders in 1099, and held by the Christians till 1187, when it was taken by Saladin. After various changes it was taken by the sultan Selim I. in 1517. In 1542 its present walls were built by Soliman the Magnificent. In 1832 the pasha of Egypt occupied it, but in 1841 it once more passed under the Turkish sceptre. Under the auspices of the "Palestine Exploration Fund" it is now being explored by means of excavations, which have already brought to light many very interesting facts regarding the ancient city, over the ruins of which the modern one is built. Its present population is about sixteen thousand, of whom four thousand are Moslems, eight thousand Jews, eighteen hundred Greeks, thirteen hundred Latins and about nine hundred of various nations.

Of the great features of Jerusalem we can recognize enough for satisfaction. Here are the slopes and here the valleys of which Scripture tells; here is the city which sages and monarchs and prophets of old time inhabited. Within the small circuit on which you look, JESUS taught and suffered and rose again. But when you want to fix exactly upon the spot where this or that great event occurred, you are at fault: you have the broad outlines of the picture, you cannot discern the minuter touches. To reconstruct the ancient city is impossible. But as Dr. Thomson reminds us, when contemplating the ruins of the city of David, "there is another Zion, whose towers are still more glorious, and shall never be overthrown." "GOD is known in her palaces for a refuge," Ps. 48: 3. And "this GOD is our GOD for ever and ever." How often is this name synonymous with the Church of the living GOD! and no other spot but one can divide with it the affection of His people; no other name but one can awaken such joyful hopes in the Christian's heart. The temporal Zion is now in the dust; but the true Zion is rising and shaking herself from it, and putting on her beautiful garments to welcome her King when He comes to reign over the whole earth.

Jerusalem is a type of the Jerusalem which is above, the great, the Holy City, the heavenly, the City of the Living GOD, the free, the mother of us all, Gal. 4: 26; Heb. 12: 22; see also Ezek. 48: 30-45. John describes the New Jerusalem, the name of which should be written on the Christian Conqueror, Rev. 3: 12, as of unequalled magnificence, "descending out of heaven from GOD," with twelve foundations of precious stones, and twelve gates of pearl, her streets of rich gold, the whole glowing with clear light, resplendent, not with sun or moon, but with the glory of GOD and of the Lamb. The gates stand ever open, and ample are the dimensions, Rev. 21: 10-27. The city is called "the bride, the Lamb's wife," the abode of such as are redeemed from among men.

JEZREEL (jez're-el), "what GOD planteth," aptly called "the Versailles of Israel," a city of great celebrity situated in the midst of a beautiful and extensive plain of the same name, on the west of Jordan. It is represented by the modern Zerin, a village of about twenty houses, situated at the western point of Mount Gilboa, and the plain is called ESDRAELON.

JOPPA (jop'pah), "beautiful," called Japho, Joshua 19:46, a sea-port town, on the shores of the Mediterranean Sea, about thirty-seven miles north-west from Jerusalem, is repeatedly mentioned in Scripture. The modern name is Jafa or Jaffa, and it has about 5000 inhabitants of whom one hundred and fifty are Jews, six hundred nominal Christians, and the rest Moslems. "Among its population are fugitives and vagabonds from all countries."

JORDAN (jor'dan), "falling down," called "the river," Gen. 31:21, the chief river of the Holy Land, the uppermost spring of which is the Hasbany. After a course of about three miles through a beautiful valley, it enters a dark defile of six or seven miles, issuing from which it enters into a marsh of about ten miles extent, the termination of which is the Lake Merom (Huleh). Leaving this lake, it flows rapidly with increasing volume for twelve miles, when it enters the Sea of Galilee. Flowing from the south-west end of this sea, it descends with great speed till it is lost in the Dead Sea. Its whole course is in a direct line about one hundred and twenty miles, and in its windings about two hundred, and is almost throughout below the level of the Mediterranean. Its Arab name is Esh-Sheriah, "the watering place."

KIDRON, or CEDRON (ke'dron), "turbid," a brook which ran through the Valley of Jehoshaphat, on the east side of Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of Olives. CHRIST passed it in His way to Gethsemane, John 18:1. The Convent of Mar Saba occupies a considerable portion of the rocky sides of this gorge. This remarkable convent consists of a large number of caves in the sides of lofty precipices, enlarged in some cases, and fashioned into houses or cells by the aid of walls closing apertures and connecting jutting strata. It has been aptly called a "beehive."

KIR, "a wall," the country between the Black Sea and the Caspian, to which the Syrians, and part of the Hebrews, were carried captive by the Assyrians.

KIR-HARE-SHETH (kir-har'e-sheth), "brick fortress," a principal city of the Moabites, called also Kir-Haresh, Isa. 16:11; Kir-Har-aseth, 2 Ki. 3:25; and Kir-Heres, Jer. 48:31, 36. It stands on the southern frontier of Moab, ten miles from the south-east corner of the Dead Sea.

KISHON (ki'shon), "tortuous, winding, stream," an "ancient river," a brook in the Holy Land, which rises in Mount Tabor, and flows nearly westward into the Mediterranean, near the northern base of Mount Carmel. Its modern name is Nahr Mukutt.

LAODICEA (la-o-di-se'ah). There were six cities so called in Asia; that mentioned in Scripture was in Southern Phrygia, about forty miles east of Ephesus. It was originally called Diospolis, and afterward Rhoas. It was destroyed by an earthquake in A. D. 63, but was soon rebuilt. It became a Christian city of eminence. It was destroyed by the Mohammedans, and is now a scene of utter desolation.

LEBANON (leb'a-non), "whiteness," always with the article the in prose. It is so called either because the whole range is composed of whitish limestone rock; or more probably because snow covers its summits during most of the year. It consists of two distinct ranges, which run parallel for about one hundred miles. The eastern range is designated Antilibanus, the southern peak of which is Hermon, or Sion. The average height of the Lebanon is about 7000 feet; that of the Anti-Lebanon, about 5000, the Hermon being 10,000 feet high.

LIBYA (lib'ya), Heb. Phut, a general name for Africa, but properly that part of it which lay on the south coast of the Mediterranean westward of Egypt; its inhabitants were a warlike race.

LYCAONIA (ly-ka-o'ni-a), a province of Asia Minor, bounded by Cappadocia on the east, Galatia on the north, Phrygia and Pisidia on the west, and by Cilicia on the south. Its chief cities were Iconium, Derbe and Lystra.

LYCIA (lish'ya), a province in the south-west of Asia Minor, bounded on the north by Phrygia, on the south by the Mediterranean, on the east by Pamphylia, and on the west by Caria. It contained about twenty-three cities, chief of which were Patara and Myra. A few Greek Christians are in this province, but the Mohammedans prevail.

LYDDA (lid'dah), the Greek form of Lod, called Diospolis, "city of Jupiter," a few miles east of Joppa, on the road to Jerusalem. It is now a poor village called Ludd.

LYDIA (lid'e-a), a maritime province in the west of Asia Minor. That mentioned in Ezek. 30:5 was Lud, a place on the continent of Africa, compare Isa. 66:19; Ezek. 27:10.

LYSTRA (lis'tra), a city of Lycaonia, in Asia Minor, about forty miles west of Iconium.

MACEDONIA (mas-se-do'ni-a), a large country north-east of Greece, peopled by the descendants of Javan. In the time of the Romans the whole country between Tænarus (Cape Matapan) and the valley of the Danube was divided into three districts, viz., Illyricum, Achaia and Macedonia (which included Thessaly, and formed with it one province). Its metropolis was Thessalonica. It was a famous monarchy under Philip and his son Alexander the Great.

MACHEPELAH (mak-pe'lah), "portion, lot, double cave," the name of the burying-place of the patriarchs, which Abraham bought from Ephron the Hittite for a burying-place for Sarah; Abraham himself was buried there; also Isaac, Rebekah and Jacob. Over this spot the celebrated Mosque El Haran stands.

MAGDALA (mag'da-la), "a tower," a town on the west of the Sea of Galilee, either the same with Dalmanutha or near it, Matt. 15:39, compare with Mark 8:10. Now a small village, called Mejdel, about three miles north of Tiberias, containing about twenty wretched hovels.

MAHANAIM (ma-ha-na'im), "camps," a town east of Jordan, on the north bank of the Jabbok.

MARCH OF THE ISRAELITES FROM EGYPT TO THE PROMISED LAND

The history of this great march is full of interest for the Bible student, and equally full of warnings, and of important lessons to the devout Christian as he wanders in this world's wilderness on his way to the Land of Promise beyond the Jordan of death. We present here but the briefest outline of this history with such references as will enable the reader to fill in the details.

The forty-sixth chapter of Genesis tells us of Israel's journey to Egypt, and from that to the second of Exodus details the subsequent history to the birth of Moses.

The Israelites sojourn in Egypt 430 years, from Abraham, B. C. 1913, to B. C. 1491, Gen. 15:13; Ex. 12:40, 41; Acts 7:6; Gal. 3:17—idolatry of, in, Ezek. 20:6-9; Ezek. 23:8—multiply in Egypt, Ex. 1:7-20; Ps. 105:24; Acts 7:17—Pharaoh's cruelty and oppression, Ex. 1:8-22; 2:11, 5; Acts 7:18-21—God promises deliverance, Ex. 2:23-25. Moses sent to them, Ps. 78; 105-107; 136; Acts 7—murmur against Moses, Ex. 5:20, 21; 14:10-12—exempt from the plagues of Egypt, Ex. 8:22, 23; 9:4-6, 26; 10:23; 11:7; 12:13—keep the first Passover, Ex. 12:1-28. 50—obtain jewels from the Egyptians, Ex. 11:2, 3; 12:35, 36; Ps. 105:37—depart from Rameses, Ex. 12:31-42; 13:3, 4; 14—number of, Ex. 12:37—none feeble, Ps. 105:37—accompanied by a mixed multitude, Ex. 12:38; Num. 11:4—their herds and flocks, Ex. 10:9, 24; 12:38; 34:3; Num. 11:22. Led by the angel of the LORD, Ex. 23:20-23; 32:34; 33:2, 14; Ps. 78:51-54; Isa. 63:11-14—order of marching and encamping, Num. 2; 10:14-28. March from Rameses to Succoth, Etham, Pi-hahiroth, Ex. 12:37; 13:20; 14:2; Num. 33:5-7. Passage of the Red Sea—destruction of Pharaoh, Ex. 14; Deut. 11:4; Ps. 78; 105-107; 136—song of Moses and Miriam, Ex. 15:1-20. March three days through the Wilderness of Shur to Marah, Ex. 15:23; Num. 33:8—murmur at the bitter water—it is sweetened, Ex. 15:24, 25. March to Elim, Ex. 15:27; Num. 33:9. To the Red Sea, Num. 33:10. To Desert of Sin, Ex. 16:1; Num. 33:11—murmur for bread, Ex. 16:2, 3—manna sent, Ex. 16:4-36—quails sent, Ex. 16:13. March to Dophkah, Alush, Num. 33:12, 14; Ex. 17:1. To Rephidim—murmur for water, Ex. 17:2, 3—water brought from the rock at Massah or Meribah, Ex. 17:5-7—Amalekites defeated, Ex. 17:8; Deut. 25:17, 18. March to Desert of Sinai in the third month, Num. 33:15; Ex. 18:5; 19:1—have judges and captains appointed, Ex. 18:25; Deut. 1:9-17—receive the Law at Sinai—terror at the giving of the Law, Ex. 19:16, 17; Num. 17:12, 13; Heb. 12:18-21—elders go up the mount, Ex. 24:1, 9-11—covenant with the LORD, Ex. 19:3-9; 24:3-8—make a golden calf, Ex. 32; Deut. 9:7-21—three thousand slain by the Levites, Ex. 32:28—plague on account of the calf, Ex. 32:35—mourn on God refusing to lead them, Ex. 33:4-6—Tabernacle of Moses pitched without the camp, Ex. 33:9, 10—contributions for the Tabernacle, Ex. 35; 21-29;

36: 3-7; Num. 7—make the Tabernacle, Ex. 35: 30-35; c. 36-40—second Passover kept, Num. 9: 1-5—numbering of the people, Num. 1: 1-46; Ex. 38: 25, 26. March to Taberah—murmuring punished by fire, Num. 11: 1-3; Deut. 9: 22; March to Kibroth-hattaavah, Num. 11: 34; 33: 16—seventy elders appointed, Num. 11: 16, 17, 24-30—murmuring for flesh, Num. 11: 4-9; Ps. 78: 18—quails sent, Num. 11: 18-23, 31, 32; Ps. 78: 26-29—punished by plague, Num. 11: 33, 34; Ps. 78: 30, 31. March to Hazereth, Num. 11: 35; 33: 17. To Kadesh, in the Desert of Paran, or Zin, Num. 12: 16; 13: 26; 33: 36; Deut. 1: 2, 19—spies sent to Canaan, Num. 13; 32: 8; Deut. 1: 22, 25; Josh. 14: 7—Discouraged and rebel at their report, Num. 14; Deut. 1: 26-35; 9: 23—spies die of plague, Num. 14: 37—Israel defeated by Amalek at Hormah, Num. 14: 40-45; Deut. 1: 41-44—dwell at Kadesh, Deut. 1: 46.

They turn back from Kadesh and wander for thirty-eight years by the Red Sea, Num. 14: 25-34; Deut. 1: 40; 2: 14—stations visited by them, Rithmah to Ezion-Geber, Num. 33: 18-36—all but two die from twenty years old, Num. 14: 28-30; Deut. 2: 14. Return to Kadesh, Num. 20: 1; 33: 36; Jud. 11: 16, 17—Sabbath-breaker stoned, Num. 15: 32-36—rebellion of Korah, Num. 16; Deut. 11: 6—fourteen thousand die of plague, Num. 16: 41-50—Miriam's death, Num. 20: 1—murmur for water at Meribah—refused a passage by Edom, Num. 20: 14-21. March from Kadesh to Beeroth and Mount Hor, or Mosera—Aaron's death, Num. 20: 22, 29; 33: 37; Deut. 10: 6—defeat King Arad, Num. 21. March to Zalmonah and Punon, Num. 33: 41, 42; 21: 6; Deut. 2: 8—murmur—bitten by serpents—healed on looking to the brazen serpent, Num. 21: 4-9. March to Oboth to the mountains of Abarim or Pisgah, Num. 21: 10-20; 33: 43-47; Deut. 2: 13-24—defeat the Amorites, Num. 21: 21-31; Deut. 2: 26-37. March by Bashan to the plains of Moab, opposite Jericho, Num. 21: 33; 22: 1; 33: 48, 49—defeat Og, king of Bashan, Num. 21: 33-35; Deut. 3: 1-17—Balak sends for Balaam to curse them, Num. 22: 24; Deut. 23: 3, 4—corrupted by the Moabites, Num. 25—the plague stayed by Phinehas, Num. 25: 5-18—conquest of Midian, Num. 31—numbering of the people, Num. 26—covenant with the LORD, Deut. 29—death of Moses—mourning for him, Deut. 34. Their provision in the wilderness, Deut. 8: 4; 29: 5, 6; Neh. 9: 21—circumcision omitted, Josh. 5: 5, 7—piety of those who entered Canaan, Josh. 23: 8; Jer. 2: 2, 3; Judg. 2: 7-10.

Joshua appointed to succeed Moses, Num. 27: 18-23; Deut. 31: 23.

MEDIA (me'di-a), "the middle land," the country of the Medes, bounded on the north by part of the Caspian Sea; on the south by Persia, Susiana and Assyria; on the east by Parthia and Hyrcania; and on the west by Armenia Major. It was partly into this country that Shalmaneser carried the ten tribes captive. The Medes and Persians, who were both branches of the great Aryan family of nations, were united under Cyrus into one monarchy, B. C. 558. It is now included under the dominion of the shah of Persia.

MEDITERRANEAN SEA. This name is not found in Scripture, but the sea is frequently referred to. It is spoken of as the "great sea," Num. 34: 6, 7; Josh. 1: 4; Ezek. 47: 10, 15, 20; "sea of the Philistines," Ex. 23: 31; "sea of Joppa," Ezra 3: 7; "the sea," Josh. 15: 4, 46; "hinder sea," Zech. 14: 8; "utmost sea," Deut. 11: 24.

MEGIDDO (me-gid'do), "place of troops," an ancient royal Canaanitish city at the north-east base of Mount Carmel. The plain on the southern border of which it stood is called the "valley of Megiddo," 1 Chr. 35: 22; Megiddon, Zech. 12: 11.

MELITA (me-le'tah), now called Malta (maul'ta), an island in the Mediterranean Sea, twenty miles long and twelve broad, on the coast of which Paul was shipwrecked. Since 1814 it has been a British dependency. Its population is about 120,000, for the most part Roman Catholics excessively ignorant.

MESOPOTAMIA (mes-o-po-ta'mi-a), "middle of rivers," Heb. Aram-naharaim, "Aram of the two rivers," a province situated between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, called by the Hebrews Padan-aram. This region, Syria or Aram, "between the two rivers," is nearly seven hundred miles long, and from fifty to two hundred and fifty broad. Here Abraham, Nahor, Sarah, Rebekah, Leah, Rachel and all the children of Jacob save Benjamin, were born. It is now under Persian rule.

MILETUS (mi-le'tus), or Miletum (mi-le'tum), a seaport city in Asia Minor, and about forty miles south of Ephesus. It originally stood on the coast; but now, by reason of the silting up of the Meander, it is ten miles inland. The ruins of the city bear the name of Melas among the Turks.

MITYLENE (mit-i-le'ne), the chief city of the island of Lesbos, in the Aegean Sea. The modern town is called Mitylen.

MIZRAIM (miz-ra'im), "distress," "straitness," the name by which Egypt is generally designated in the Hebrew Scriptures. It is a word in the dual number signifying the two Misraim—i. e., the Upper and the Lower Misraim, the name by which Egypt is still spoken of by the Arabs. In Isa. 11: 11 the name denotes Lower Egypt as distinguished from Pathros or Upper Egypt.

MORIAH (mo-ri'ah), "the appearance of JEHOVAH," a mountain within the walls of the east part of Jerusalem. The great Mosque of Omar is now on its summit.

MOSQUE OF OMAR. This Mohammedan temple stands in the Haram-es-Sherif, which certainly occupies the area of Solomon's Temple. The ROCK UNDER THE DOME, with its interesting CAVE-CHAPEL, is supposed to indicate the spot where Abraham's altar stood on which he was ready to offer Isaac.

MOUNTAINS. Palestine is very mountainous. The expression "mountain of Israel," Ezek. 36: 1, denotes the entire country. The most celebrated were Carmel, near the Mediterranean, Josh. 19: 26; Ebal, in Samaria, 8: 30; Egedi, near the Dead Sea, 15: 62; Gaash, in Ephraim, 24: 30; Gilboa, south of the valley of Jezreel, 2 Sam. 1: 21; Gilead, beyond Jordan, Gen. 31: 21; Gerizim, in Samaria, Judg. 9: 7; Hermon, beyond Jordan, Josh. 11: 3; Hor, in Idumea, Num. 20: 25; Horeb, probably the same as, or the range of which Sinai was a part, Deut. 1: 2; Lebanon, or Libanus, which separates Canaan on the north from Syria, 3: 25; Moriah, on which the temple was built, 2 Chr. 3: 1; Nebo, a peak of Pisgah, Num. 32: 3; Olivet, on the east of Jerusalem, Matt. 21: 1; Paran, in Arabia, Gen. 14: 6; Deut. 1: 1; Peor, in Moab, Num. 23: 28; Pisgah, in the country of Moab, Num. 21: 20; Sier, in Idumea, Gen. 14: 6; Sinai, in Arabia, Ex. 19: 2; Deut. 33: 2; Sion, or Zion, in Jerusalem, 2 Sam. 5: 7; 2 Ki. 19: 21; Tabor, in Lower Galilee, to the north of the great plain, Judg. 4: 6.

MOUNT OF OLIVES (ol'ivz), or OLIVET (ol'i-ve't), called also Mount of Corruption, 2 Ki. 23: 13, a hill on the east side of Jerusalem, from which it was separated by the Kidron Valley. It derived its name from the olive trees which abounded on its sides, some of which still remain. David went up it when he fled from Absalom. It was a favorite resort of Jesus. By way of, he entered Jerusalem, Matt. 21: 1; Mark 11: 1; at night he abode in, Luke 21: 37; John 8: 1; retired to, after the Passover, Luke 21: 39; Matt. 26: 30; ascended to Heaven from, Acts 1: 12. The ridge extends about a mile from north to south, and is about two hundred and twenty feet above the site of the temple. It has three summits with distinct names.

MYRA (mi'rah), a city of Lycia, near the Mediterranean Sea, and forty miles east of Patara; here Paul embarked for Rome. Now called Dembra.

MYSIA (mis'i-a), the north-west province of Asia Minor on the Aegean Sea.

NAIN (na'in), "beauty," a town of Galilee, about two miles south of Mount Tabor, memorable as the place where CHRIST restored to life the son of a widow. The place exists under the name of Nein.

NAZARETH (naz'a-reth), "separated," "sanctified," a small city of mixed race, in Lower Galilee, about seventy miles north of Jerusalem, six west of Mount Tabor and twenty-four south-east of Ptolemais. It is not mentioned in the Old Testament. It was noted for the wickedness of its inhabitants, so much so that Nicodemus' first query, on hearing the LORD called "Jesus of Nazareth," was, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" Here JESUS dwelt from his childhood till He commenced His public ministry; here He preached, and an attempt was made to put Him to death. After this He made Capernaum His chief place of residence, "His own City." It still exists under the name of en-Nazirah, having about four hundred inhabitants.

NEAPOLIS (ne-ap'o-lis), "new city," a seaport city on the east of Macedonia, a few miles south of Philippi. The site is occupied by the Turkish village of Kavalla, with about 6,000 inhabitants, nine-tenths of whom are Mohammedans, the rest Greeks.

NICOPOLIS (ni-kop'o-lis), "a city of victory," the name of several ancient cities. That to which Paul refers was probably in Epirus. It was founded by Augustus to commemorate the battle of Actium.

NILE, a celebrated river of Egypt which flows from south to north. It begins to swell at the middle of June, attains its greatest height in September, and subsides to its usual level about the end of October, and, on the northern part of Egypt, it spreads about twenty miles on each side. When the waters subside, the inhabitants sow their seed, which settles into the mud, and without further trouble produces a rich crop. It is called Sihor, "the black river," Josh. 13: 3; Jer. 2: 18; and the river of Egypt, Heb. Nahar Mitzraim, Gen. 15: 18.

NINEVEH (nin'e-veh), "habitation of Ninus," the ancient capital of Assyria. Its founder, according to Assyrian mythology, was the son of Nimrod. It is said to have been sixty miles in circumference, and in the time of Jonah its population must have been 600,000. It outstripped even Babylon itself in its dimensions. Its walls were sixty miles in compass, one hundred feet in height, and so thick that three chariots abreast could be driven along their top; and they were defended by 1,500 towers, each 200 feet high. In the year 601 B. C. it was completely destroyed by fire, and soon after the time of CHRIST not a trace of it could be found. By recent excavations on the site many remarkable sculptured monuments have been discovered, which from their structure and inscriptions, illustrate certain notable features of that ancient city, and confirm notices of it in the histories of ancient authors.

NO, "place," "portion," a once populous city of Egypt, generally thought to be Thebes or Diospolis. In Nah. 3: 8 it is called "populous No," in the Heb. No-Amon—i. e., No of Amon, meaning the place or possessions or chief seat of the Egyptian god Amon. It originally stood on both sides of the river Nile, about five hundred miles from its mouth. In the time of its splendor it extended on both sides as far as the mountains; it had one hundred gates, and on an emergency could send into the field by each of these gates twenty thousand fighting men and two hundred chariots. About 81 B. C., after a siege of three years, it was finally destroyed by Ptolemy X. Extensive ruins still mark its site. It is impossible to wander among these scenes and behold these hoary yet magnificent ruins without emotions of astonishment and deep solemnity. Everything around testifies of vastness and of utter desolation. All is gloomy, awful, grand. The walls of all the temples are covered with hieroglyphics. Many of these afford happy illustrations of Egyptian history.

NOB (nob), "a high place," a small town built on a conical rocky tell about two miles north of Jerusalem.

NOPH (noff), a city of Egypt, the ancient Memphis, capital of the country in the time of the patriarchs.

ON, "light," "the sun," rendered in the Septuagint version Heliopolis, "city of the sun," one of the oldest cities in the world. In Jer. 43: 13 it is called Beth-Shemesh, in Ezek. 30: 17 Aven. It was situated in the land of Goshen, in Egypt, about twenty miles from Memphis. The site of the city is now occupied by low mounds, the only remains of its famous temple being a granite obelisk about sixty-eight feet high.

OPHIR (o'fir), "abundance," a country which abounded in gold and precious stones. Its locality has not been identified; some place it on the east coast of Africa, and some in India.

PALESTINE (pal'es-teen), "land of strangers or emigrants," called Canaan, Num. 33: 5; Land of Promise, Gen. 13: 15; Land of Jehovah, Hos. 9: 3; Land of Israel, 1 Sam. 13: 19; Immanuel's Land, Isa. 8: 8; the Holy Land, Zech. 2: 12. The Hebrew word Peleseth, usually rendered Palestine, is also sometimes rendered Philistia, Ps. 60: 8; 87: 4; 98: 9, and Palestina, Ex. 15: 14; Isa. 14: 29, 30. The name Palestine originally meant only "the land of the Philistines." Its boundaries are described by Moses, Num. 34: 1-12. Modern Palestine is divided into two pashalics—Sidon, including Western Palestine, and Damascus, comprehending all east of Jordan. Palestine is now "a land of ruins." Everywhere are seen the remains of cities and villages.

PAMPHYLIA (pam-fil'e-a), "a nation made up of every tribe," a province of Asia Minor, bounded on the east by Cilicia, on the west by Lycia, on the north by Pisidia, and on the south by the Mediterranean.

PAPHOS (pa'fos), a famous city of Cyprus, situated on the western coast of the island. Its modern name is Baffa, where ruins are found.

PATARA (pat'a-rah), a seaport town of Lycia, in Asia Minor, with a large harbor on the east side of the river Xanthus, and about forty miles west of Myra. The site of the city is now a desert. Ruins of great extent are seen rising above the mounds of sand which cover the place.

PATMOS (pat'mos), one of the Sporades, "the scattered isles," a rocky and bare island in the Ægean Sea, situated about forty-five miles westward of Miletus. It is about thirty Roman or twenty-eight English miles in circumference. It has a safe and large harbor. It is now called Patino, with a population of about 4,000. It was the place of John's exile, where he wrote the REVELATIONS.

PEOR (pe'or), "the cleft," a mountain in Moab, near to Pisgah.

PERGAH (per'gah), a city of Pamphylia, on the Cestrus, about forty miles north from the Mediterranean shore.

PERGAMOS (per'ga-mos), "height, elevation," a city of Mysia, in Asia Minor, situated about twenty miles from the sea on the river Cai-cus, "in one of the most lovely and fertile valleys of the world." Under the Romans it became the capital of a province called Asia Propria. It was famous for its immense library, collected in rivalry of that of Alexandria. From it our "parchment" (pergamenum) derives its name. It was the headquarters of the opposition to CHRIST and His Gospel in that region, Rev. 2: 13. The modern city, called Bergamo, abounds in ruins of great extent. Its population is estimated at from 14,000 to 30,000, of whom 3,000 are Greeks, 300 Armenians and the rest Turks.

PERSIA (per'zhya, Heb. Pharas), an ancient kingdom of Asia. In the height of its glory it was 2,800 miles long and 2,000 broad, and included parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. From the south of the Caspian Sea to Hindostan, a continued chain of deserts extends; and in the southern provinces the plains, as well as the mountains, are sterile and bare. The northern districts, on the contrary, are remarkable for their beauty and fertility. The rivers of Persia are few and small; and instead of falling into the sea, most of them flow into lakes in the interior. The established religion is the Mohammedan, but there are still some who adhere to the ancient worship of fire.

PHENICE (fe-ni'se), "palm," a seaport town, more properly Phoenix, now Lutro, on the south-west shore of the island of Crete.

PHILADELPHIA (fil-a-del'fi-a), "brother love," a city of the province of Lydia, in Asia Minor, about twenty-five miles south-east of Sardis, and about seventy north-east of Smyrna. Its modern name is Alla Shehr. The population is about 15,000, most of whom are Turks. It contains the ruins of some twenty-five churches.

PHILIPPI (fil-lip'pi), "warlike men," "lovers of horses," one of the chief cities of Macedonia, lying on the borders of Thrace, and on the banks of the river Gangitis (now Angista), a deep and rapid stream about seventy miles north-east from Thessalonica. It was repaired and named by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great. The city is now wholly in ruins.

PHILISTIA (fil-lis'ch'a), "land of strangers," or the "land of the Philistines," embraced the coast plain on the south-west of Palestine, extending for about forty miles from Joppa to the valley of Gerar on the south, and with a breadth of from ten to twenty miles. The Philistines probably emigrated originally from Crete either directly or through Egypt into Palestine.

PHOENICIA (fe-nish'i-a) or PHOENICE (fe-ni'se), a small country on the coast of Syria, stretching from the promontory of Carmel about one hundred and twenty miles north, with an average breadth of twenty miles. The name is probably derived from the Greek phoenix (a palm tree); it does not occur in the Old Testament. Tyre and Sidon were the principal cities of Phœnicia.

PHRYGIA (fri'jya), "dry, barren," an inland province of Asia Minor. Its boundaries are not clearly defined. Its principal cities were Laodicea, Hierapolis and Colosse.

PHUT, "afflicted," a country of Africa which some have identified with Nubia, others have supposed that it was west of Lybia on the north coast of Africa; but more generally it has been identified with Lybia.

PISGAH (piz'gah), "the heights, an isolated peak," the name of the range of hills of which Nebo was one of the peaks. Moses is sometimes said to have viewed Canaan from Nebo, and sometimes from Pisgah.

PISIDIA (pi-sid'e-a), "a pitch tree," a mountainous province of Asia Minor, having Phrygia on the north and Pamphylia on the south.

PONTUS (pon'tus), "the sea," a province of Asia Minor, bounded on the north by the Pontus Euxinus (Euxine Sea), whence it took its name, on the south by Cappadocia, on the east by Colchis, and on the west by Paphlagonia and Galatia. Under Nero it became a Roman province along with Cappadocia.

PTOLEMAIS (tol-e-ma'is), a seaport town of Canaan, on the shore of the Mediterranean, about twenty-seven miles south of Tyre. It was an important city, well fortified, in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, the king of Egypt, who greatly enlarged and beautified it. On his third missionary journey Paul visited it, and "saluted the brethren and abode with them one day;" it was formerly called Accho, Ju. 1:31; is now called Akka or St. Jean d' Acre. Its population at present is about 5,000.

PUTEOLI, a seaport of Campania in Italy, in the Bay of Naples. Here the apostle stayed a few weeks on his way to Rome, Acts 28:13, 14. The present city is called Pozzuoli.

QUICKSANDS, or SYRTES, sand-banks on the coast of Africa over against Sicily, fatal to ships, Acts 27:17.

RABBAH (rab'bah), "a great city," the capital city of the Ammonites, stood near the source of the river Jabbok, called Rabbath-beni-Ammon, Deut. 3:11; Rabbath of the Ammonites, Ezek. 21:20. Its modern name is Ammân. Its ruins lie twenty-two miles east of Jordan.

RAMAH (ra'mah), "a high place," a city of Benjamin, near to Gibeah; here the Jewish prisoners were disposed of after their capital was taken, which occasioned the mourning of Rachel's daughters, Jer. 40:1; 31:15. It has been identified with Er-Ram, a small Arab village about five miles north of Jerusalem. 2. A city on the frontiers of Asher. Identified with Rameh, about seventeen miles south-east of Tyre. 3. One of the fortified places of Naphtali.

RAMESES (ra-me'ses), one of Pharaoh's treasure cities of Lower Egypt, in the land of Goshen, was built by the Israelites. The site some suppose is to be sought in the ruins of Aboo-Kesheyd, north-east of Heliopolis.

RHEGIUM (re'ji-um), "breach," a city on the south-west coast of Italy, opposite Messina, in Sicily. Paul landed on his way to Rome, Acts 28:13. Its modern name is Reggio, the capital of Calabria, with a population of about 10,000.

RHODES, an island of the Mediterranean, about seventy-five miles east of Crete, and about one hundred and twenty miles in circumference. The city of Rhodes was celebrated for the Colossus, a brazen statue of Apollo, one hundred and five feet high, which was erected over the entrance of the harbor. The population of the island is about 20,000.

ROME (rôme), the capital of Italy, on the river Tiber, about fifteen miles from its mouth, long the mistress of the world; was founded about 748 B. C., and increased to such an extent that it covered seven hills, whence it was called urbs septicolis, "city of the seven hills." In Nero's reign (A. D. 64), about two-thirds of it was destroyed by fire, but it was rebuilt with great splendor. In the reigns of Vespasian and Trajan the population was about 2,000,000. Rome is not mentioned in the Old Testament; but the empire of Rome is referred to by Daniel, under the name of the "fourth kingdom," Dan. 2:40; 7:7, 17, 19; 11:39, 40. The population of the Roman Empire in the time of CHRIST is estimated at 85,000,000. Strangers from Rome were among those at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost; from it Claudius commanded all Jews to depart; Paul was carried to it a prisoner, and remained there two years preaching. He sent an epistle to the saints there, written from Corinth, A. D. 57 or 58. It is called "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," Rev. 17:18. For centuries this great city was the capital of the "States of the Church," where the Pope had sway as a temporal prince. In the month of September, 1870, the troops of Victor Emanuel entered Rome, and in a few days the "States of the Church" ceased to exist. The Pope was deprived of his temporal power, and permitted to reside in Rome only as the spiritual overseer of the Church which owns his authority.

SALAMIS (sal'a-mis), "shaken, beaten," a city in the island of Cyprus, on its south-east coast.

SALIM (sa'lim), "peace," an ancient city, about six miles north-east of Jerusalem, near the river Jordan.

SALMONE (sal-mo'ne), the eastern promontory of the island of Crete.

SALT SEA, the name of that lake at the south-east of the Holy Land which separated it from the country of the Moabites, Gen. 14:3; Deut. 3:17; it is called also the Sea of the Plain, Deut. 4:49; the Sea, Ezek. 47:8; the East Sea, Joel 2:20; the Asphaltic Lake. The Arabs called it the Dead Sea and the Sea of Lot (Bahr Lut). It is about forty-six miles long, and a little more than ten miles broad, although these dimensions vary according to the season of the year. Its greatest depth is about thirteen hundred feet. Its surface is twelve hundred and eighty-nine feet below the level of the Mediterranean. Its waters contain twenty-six and a quarter per cent. of saline particles, while those of the ocean contain only four per cent. Its specific gravity is 1.172, so that a traveler floated in it "easily in an upright position, with head and shoulders above the water." The land around it is gloomy and barren, and an awful silence hangs over the whole scene.

SAMARIA (sa-mā'ria), a "watch-height," in Heb. Shomeron, corrupted by the Greeks into Samaria, was the capital city of the Ephraimites, situated about forty-two miles north from Jerusalem, and called after the name of the original owner (Shemer) of the hill on which it was built, about B. C. 925, by Omri the sixth king of Israel. For two centuries it was the capital of the kingdom of Israel, till the carrying away of the ten tribes by Shalmaneser, B. C. 720. The site of the city is now covered with terraced vineyards and corn-fields, amid which are groups and long ranges of columns. On one section of it stands the small village of Sebastieh, a corruption of the Greek Sebaste. The name is also applied to the country of the Ephraimites; in the New Testament, it always means the country between Judea and Galilee, west of Jordan, which belonged to the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. Christians were scattered through this region by persecution; Philip preached CHRIST to its inhabitants, and they received the Word.

SAMOS (sā'mos), an island in the east of the Mediterranean, about nine miles from the coast of Asia Minor, south of Ephesus. It is about seventy-two miles in circumference, and contains about 12,000 inhabitants.

SAMOTHRACIA (sam-o-thra'shya), a small island in the north-east part of the Ægean Sea, about thirty miles distant from the coast of Thracia. It is seventeen miles in circumference, is now called Samo-thraki, and contains only a single village.

SARDIS (sar'dis), capital of the ancient kingdom of Lydia, in Asia Minor, situated at the foot of Mount Tmolus, in the plain watered by the river Pactolus. Its modern name is Sart Kalessi, consisting of only a few miserable dwellings amid the ruins of former grandeur.

SAREPTA (sa-rep'tah), Luke 4:26, a Phœnician town on the shores of the Mediterranean between Tyre and Sidon. The Old Testament name is Zarephath (zar'e-fath).

SEA. The Hebrew word (yām) rendered "sea" is applied to the ocean, Gen. 1:2, 10; lakes, Job 14:11; great rivers, as the Nile, Nah. 3:8; Isa. 19:5; Amos 8:8; the Euphrates, Jer. 51:36; the sea of Gennesareth or Galilee, Matt. 4:18; the Sea of Jazer, beyond Jordan, near the city of Jazer, Jer. 48:32; the Dead or Salt Sea, Gen. 14:3; the Red Sea (called the Egyptian Sea, Isa. 11:15), Ex. 10:19, and twenty-five other passages; the Great Sea (called also the "hinder"—i. e., the western—sea, Dan. 11:24; Joel 2:20); the Mediterranean, which washes the whole western shore of Canaan, Ps. 104:25; the molten lava in the temple, 1 Ki. 7:23; 2 Chr. 4:2; the whole mighty ocean which shall give up its dead, Rev. 20:13.

The SEA or LAKE OF GALILEE (gal'i-le), a lake in the Holy Land about fourteen miles long and seven broad in the widest part. Its surface is six hundred and fifty-three feet below the level of the Mediterranean. It is called by Moses the SEA OF CHINNERETH, Num. 34:11; the New Testament writers call it the SEA OF GALILEE, Matt. 4:18; 15:29; Mark 1:16; the SEA OF TIBERIAS, John 6:1, 23; and the SEA OF GENNESARETH, Luke 5.

On this lake our LORD calmed the storm, and here His disciples were accustomed to fish.

SEIR (se'ir), "rough, bristly," the mountain district on the east of Arabah; was afterward the possession of Esau and his posterity. Hence Seir is often put for Edom or the Edomites, Ezek. 25:8. It extended from the Dead Sea to the Elanitic Gulf. 2. A mountain named as one of the landmarks on the north boundary of Judah, Josh. 15:10.

SELA, or SELAH (se'lah), "a rock," the capital of Idumea, situated near the base of Mount Hor in the Wady Mousa. Is usually known by the name Petra, which is the Greek equivalent of Sela. It consisted of dwellings cut out of the rock. It is now a lonely, deserted ruin, according to the words of the prophets.

SELEUCIA (se-leu'shi-a), a city of Syria, situated on the shores of the Mediterranean, about five miles north of the river Orontes, and about sixteen miles west of Antioch.

SEPHARVAIM (sef-ar-va'im), "the two Sipparas," a city of Mesopotamia whence colonists were brought to Samaria. It stood on the Euphrates above Babylon, on both sides of the river.

SHEBA (she'bah), "covenant," or Seba. The country or kingdom of this name comprehended the greater part of Arabia Felix, the Saba of profane history.

SHECHEM (she'kem), "shoulder, ridge," a town of the Canaanites, called also Sichem, Gen. 12:6; Sychem, Acts 7:16; and Sychar, John 4:5. It was situated in the valley between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, about thirty-four miles north of Jerusalem and seven south of Samaria. It was called Neapolis by the Romans, a name which is still preserved in its Arabic name Nablus; it became the capital of Samaria. It has about 8,000 inhabitants, but only some fifteen or twenty Samaritan families.

SHILOH (shi'lo), "peace," a name of the MESSIAH, Gen. 49:10; comp. Mic. 5:2, 5, with Matt. 2:6, was also applied to a city of the tribe of Ephraim, among the hills half-way between Bethel and Shechem. The modern name of Shiloh is Seilun.

SHUR (shur), "a wall," a city on the confines of Egypt, somewhere near the modern Suez, and which gave name to the adjacent part of the desert.

SHUSHAN (shu'shan), "a lily," called Susa by the Greeks, the capital of the province of Elam, a fortress of the ancient Susiana or Cissia. It stood on the banks of the Choaspes. It is now a mass of ruins called Sus, lying between the Shapur and the Dizful.

SIDDIM (sid'dim), "open fields, plains," the broad plain in which Sodom and Gomorrah lay. It was "full of slime pits," Gen. 14:10.

SIDON (si'don), the Greek form of Zidon, "a fishery," the capital of Phœnicia, situated on the shore of the Mediterranean, about twenty miles north of Tyre, and about twenty south of Beirut; it was founded by Zidon, the eldest son of Canaan; judgments against it, on account of the great wickedness of its inhabitants, were foretold by Ezekiel, 28:10, and it is frequently mentioned in the Gospel history, Matt. 11:21, 22; 15:21; Mark 3:8; 7:24, 31; Luke 4:26; 6:17; 10:13, 14. Paul, in his voyage to Rome, touched at, and found Christians there, Acts 27:3. It is now called Saida, a poor town, with a population of about 7,000 Moslems and 500 Jews.

SILLOAM (si-lo'am), "sent, sending," a fountain of water rising in the southern part of the Tyropœon valley, between the upper and the lower city of Jerusalem, whence it flowed past Zion and Moriah. It is called a "pool," Neh. 3:15; John 9:7-11; spoken of as running "waters," Isa. 8:6. There were probably two pools, the upper, Isa. 7:3 (called also the King's Pool, Neh. 2:14), and the lower pool, Isa. 22:9.

SINAI (si'ni), "bush of the LORD," a mountain in the desert of Arabia, situated in the peninsula formed by the two gulfs of the Red Sea. The area of the peninsula is about 11,500 square miles. It is one of the most mountainous and intricate regions on the face of the earth. It is a desert of rocks, gravel and boulders; of gaunt mountain gorges and arid valleys and plateaus. Horeb was probably the name of the mountain group of which Sinai formed a peak. There is much difference of opinion as to which of these peaks was Sinai; the Jebel Mousa answers most fully to the descriptions of Moses, and is in all probability the true "Mount of the Law." In the library of the famous "Convent of Mount Sinai," Tischendorf found the Codex Sinaiticus, which is the oldest and the only complete uncial MS. of the New Testament hitherto discovered.

SMYRNA (smer'nah), "myrrh," a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, on the east shore of the Archipelago, or Ægean Sea, and about fifty miles north of Ephesus. It is now called Ismir by the Turks. Its population is estimated at about 130,000.

SODOM (sod'om), "burning," a city in the "plain of Jordan," near by, or on the ground now covered with the Dead or Salt Sea; on account of the extreme wickedness of its inhabitants, it was consumed with fire from heaven, and swallowed up by an earthquake. The name is used metaphorically, Rev. 11:8. Sodoma is the Greek form, Rom. 9:29.

SYENE (si-e'ne), "opening or key," an ancient city in the southern frontiers of Egypt, on the east of the Nile, and about five hundred miles south of Alexandria. The modern city of Aswan stands near its ruins.

SYRACUSE (sir'a-kuse), a noted city on the south-east coast of the island of Sicily. In the modern town, which is a place of some importance, are to be found some ruins of the ancient city.

SYRIA (sir'e-a), an ancient kingdom, situated on the north frontiers of Canaan, and of which Damascus for a long time, and afterward Antioch, was the capital. It was known to the Hebrews under the name of Aram.

TABOR (tā'bor), "mound, quarry," a celebrated mountain in Palestine, six miles east of Nazareth, on the northern side of the plain of Esdraelon, with a graceful, rounded summit. Its height above the sea is 1,865 feet. It is supposed, but not proven, to be that on which CHRIST was transfigured, and which is called by Peter the holy mount. 2. A city at the foot of the mountain, also called Chisloth-Tabor. 3. An oak or grove of oaks in Benjamin, 1 Sam. 10:3.

TADMOR (tad'mor), "palm tree," a city once in great renown, built by Solomon in the midst of a desert, about halfway between Damascus and the Euphrates, at the foot of a range of chalky hills. It retained this name till the conquest of Alexander the Great, when it was changed to Palmyra. Its ruins exhibit innumerable and most magnificent specimens of architecture, covering several miles.

TAHAPANES (ta-hap'a-nes), an ancient city of Lower Egypt, called Tehaphnehes, Ezek. 30:18; Tahpanhes, Jer. 43:7; 44:1; 46:14, and Hanes, Isa. 30:4.

TARSHISH (tar'shish), "hard," an old celebrated, opulent, cultivated, commercial city, which carried on trade in the Mediterranean and with the seaports of Syria. This was probably the city of Tartessus, in Spain, then a Phœnician colony.

TARSUS (tar'sus), the capital of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, on the banks of the river Cydnus, the native place of Paul, Acts 21:39. As a seat of Greek philosophy and literature it ranked with Athens and Alexandria.

TEKOA or TEKOA (te-ko'ah), "a pitching of tents," a city six miles south of Bethlehem, the ruins of which bear the name Teku'a.

THEBEZ (the'bez), "brightness," or Thebes, not the celebrated Egyptian city (see No), but a city of the tribe of Ephraim, situated near to Shechem and thirteen miles south-west of Bethshan. It is represented by the modern village of Tubds.

THE HOLY LAND was bounded by Arabia on the east; on the south by the wilderness of Paran, Idumea and Egypt; on the west by the Mediterranean; and on the north by the mountains of Lebanon. Canaan proper was about one hundred and fifty-eight miles long, and on an average about forty broad. As occupied by all the tribes, including those on the east of Jordan, it consisted of about 19,000 square miles. But as extended by conquest in the time of David and Solomon the kingdom reached to the Euphrates, and to the remotest confines of Edom and Moab, 1 Ki. 4:21. It has been distinguished by various names, such as Canaan, the Land of Promise, Judea, Palestine and the Holy Land. It is described as "a land flowing with milk and honey." It was well watered, very fruitful, abounding with rich pastures and flowers, and much diversified with hills and valleys. From its position its climate was very hot during eight months in the year. It is described in reference to many of its natural advantages, Deut. 8:7-9; 11:10-12; promised to Abraham, Gen. 12:7; its boundary, Ex. 23:31; Num. 34:1; Josh. 1:3; conquered by Joshua, 11:16; its kings enumerated, 12:9; the names of those who were to divide it, Num. 34:16; how to be divided, 26:52; divided by lot, Josh. 14:1, etc.; its borders not conquered, 13:1; Judg. 2:3; its ruined cities to be rebuilt after the return of the Israelites from their dispersion, Isa. 49:19; 61:3; 52:9; 54:3; 61:4; Ezek. 36:33; what portion of it will be for the sanctuary, 45: 1, etc.; for the city, 6; for the prince, 7; its boundary, 47: 13; its division by lot, 48: 1. At the time of CHRIST it was divided into five provinces, Judea, Samaria, Galilee, Perea and Idumea. This once beautiful land has been constantly suffering under the horrors of servitude and frequent wars. After the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 71, the land remained almost desolate till about the fourth century, when pilgrims began to resort to it. In the beginning of the seventh century it was occupied by the Saracens, who held it till it was taken by the Crusaders in the twelfth. For about eighty years after that it was the scene of constant wars between the Christians and the Saracens. After passing through various revolutions it was finally absorbed in the Turkish empire in 1317. Its once noble cities are now poor villages, and most of the former villages are utterly extinct. Its barren, poverty-stricken and altogether ruinous condition affords a remarkable example of the fulfillment of the divine threatening, "He turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water-springs into dry ground; a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein," Ps. 107: 33, 34.

THESSALONICA (thes-a-lo-ne'ka), the capital city of Macedonia, situated on the Thermaic Gulf (Gulf of Saloniki). It was anciently called Therma. Here Paul, Silas and Timothy planted a church, and to the Christians here Paul sent two epistles. Its modern name is Saloniki, and it has a population of about 70,000.

THE THREE TAVERNS, a place on the Applan Way, about thirty-three Roman miles south of Rome.

THYATIRA (thi-a-ti'rah), a city of Lydia, in Asia Minor, about twenty-seven miles north of Sardis, and fifty-six north-east of Smyrna. Its modern name is Ak Hissar, with a population of about 15,000, between 300 and 400 of whom are nominal Christians.

TIBEREAS (ti-be'ryas), a city on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. It was built by Herod Antipas, the murderer of John the Baptist, in honor of the emperor Tiberius, and during the Roman supremacy was the metropolis of Galilee. It was noted for several centuries after the destruction of Jerusalem for its rabbinical academy. Here the Jewish Mishna was completed. The modern city is called Tubarieh. In 1837 it was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, six hundred of the inhabitants perishing in the ruins. It contains about two thousand inhabitants, of whom a few are Christians, eight hundred Jews, and the rest Mohammedans. It is one of the four holy cities of the Jews (the others being Jerusalem, Hebron and Safed), in which prayers are offered for the world twice every day.

TOPHET (to'fet), or more correctly TOPHETH, 2 Ki. 23: 10, a place on the south-east of Jerusalem, in the "valley of the son of Hinnom" by "the entry of the east gate." It became in later times the scene of sacrifices to Baal. It received its name from toph, a drum, which was beaten to drown the cries of the victims.

TRACHONITIS (trak-o-ni'tis), "rugged region," a small rocky district east of Jordan, of which Philip was tetrarch. Identified with the modern Lejah, south of Damascus, and in the centre of the kingdom of Bashan. Its Hebrew name was Argob.

TROAS (tro'as), a seaport town near to the Hellespont, between the promontories Lectum and Sigeum, south of the site of ancient Troy; sometimes considered as belonging to the Lesser Mysia. It must, if we may judge by the ruins, have been of considerable extent. Indeed, it was of importance as the point of arrival and departure for those journeying between Macedonia and certain Asiatic districts. It was here that Paul had the heavenly vision which led him to cross over into Europe with the Gospel message. It is now called Eski Stamboul.

TROCYLLIUM (tro-gil'le-um), a cape and town on the Ionian coast, between Ephesus and the mouth of the Meander at the foot of Mount Mycale over against Samos.

TYRE (tire), "rock," an ancient and flourishing city of Phœnicia, on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. There were two cities of the same name; one, the most ancient, was situated on the mainland, and was destroyed by Alexander the Great; the other stood upon a small island, about two hundred yards from the coast. It is called the daughter of Zidon, Isa. 23: 12, and is frequently noticed in the Scriptures. The "coasts of Tyre" were once visited by CHRIST; the Gospel was received there. The predictions against Tyre have been so fully verified that it is now a miserable ruin, unoccupied except by a few fishermen as "a place to spread nets upon," Ezek. 26: 14. Its modern name is Sur.

UR, "fire, light," an ancient city of Chaldea, the native place of Terah and Abraham, has been identified by some with Mugheir, some desolate mounds situated about six miles west of the Euphrates, and midway between the ruins of Babylon and the Persian Gulf. But possibly Edessa, the modern Orfah or Urfah, occupies the site of "Ur of the Chaldees."

UZ, "sandy, soft soil," a country in Arabia, where Job resided; its situation is uncertain, but probably it adjoined Bashan on the east; it is first mentioned in Gen. 10: 23.

VALLEY, low ground lying between hills, as of Siddim, where stood Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 14: 3; of Shaveh, or the King's Dale, 17; Eshcol, Num. 32: 9; Jezreel (ESDRAELON), Hos. 1: 5; Bochim, Jud. 2: 5; Gad, 2 Sam. 24: 5 (margin); Jericho, Deut. 34: 3; Lebanon, Josh. 11: 17; the Passengers, or Hamon-gog, Ezek. 39: 11; Achor, Josh. 7: 24; Isa. 65: 10; Hos. 2: 15; Ajalon, Josh. 10: 12; Sorek, Jud. 16: 4; Ela, 1 Sam. 21: 9; Rephaim, or giants, Josh. 15: 8; 18: 16; 2 Sam. 5: 18; Isa. 17: 5; Berachah, 2 Chr. 20: 26; Hinnom or Tophet, Josh. 18: 16; 2 Ki. 23: 10; Jer. 7: 32; Megiddo, 2 Chr. 35: 22; Zech. 12: 11; Salt, 2 Sam. 8: 13; Succoth, Ps. 60: 6; 108: 7; Baca, Ps. 84: 6; Gibeon, Isa. 28: 21; Jehoshaphat, or D. cision, Joel 3: 2, 14; Shittim, 18; Moab, Deut. 34: 6; Zephathah, 2 Chr. 14: 10; Zeboim, 1 Sam. 13: 18; Gerar, Gen. 26: 17; Hebron, 37: 14.

WILDERNESS. The Heb. word midbar, usually translated "wilderness," is derived from a root which signifies "to lead to pasture;" and means a pastoral country or district as distinguished from an agricultural. The midbar of Syria and Arabia was inhabited for the most part by nomads, who lived in tents. Mention is made of the wilderness of Arabia, Shur, Paran, Jericho, Judah, Engedi, Ziph, Maen. Beersheba, etc., Ex. 14: 3; 15: 22; Num. 10: 12; 13: 3; 14: 2, 29; Deut. 1: 19; 32: 10; Luke 8: 29; the Hebrews thus named the common ground near cities and villages, which remained uncultivated, and was destined for feeding their cattle, 1 Ki. 19: 15; Isa. 40: 3; Matt. 3: 1; 15: 33; Luke 15.

ZIKLAG (zik'lag), "pressed," a city on the south of Judea; was given by Achish, king of Gath, to David for an asylum from the rage of Saul.

ZION (zi'on), "dry, sunny mount," called Sion in the New Testament, the highest point in Jerusalem, being 2,539 feet above the level of the Mediterranean. See JERUSALEM.

ZOAN (zo'an), "low," a very ancient city of Egypt (built seven years after Hebron), not far from the Mediterranean, near the mouth of the Tanitic branch of the Nile, and long of great note. It was called TANIS by the Greeks; now Sân, an insignificant village.

ZOAR (zo'ar), "smallness," originally called Bela, one of the five cities which rebelled against Chedorlaomer. It seems to have stood near the base of the mountain range at the south-east corner of the Dead Sea.

Antioch, an'ti-ok, (1) The capital of Syria, on the banks of the river Orontes, about 30 miles from where it falls into the Mediterranean, and about 180 miles north of Sidon, and 300 north of Jerusalem. It was built by Seleucus Nicator, b.c. 307, and was the residence of the Syrian kings, the Seleucids. It was ranked the third city of the earth. Luke and Theophilus were born in this place. Here Paul and Barnabas preached, and had many Christian converts, Ac. 11.20.—the term Christian was first used here, 26.—Paul reproves Peter at, Ga. 2.11-15. From it Paul started on his missionary journeys. It was the scene of the birth and earlier labours of the celebrated Greek father Chrysostom. It has been besieged and plundered no fewer than fifteen times, and has been visited by four earthquakes, in one of which 25,000 persons are said to have perished. It is of little else than a heap of ruins.—(2) of Pisidia, a city of Asia Minor, about 25 miles north-east of Seleucia, in which Paul and Barnabas preached the gospel, Ac. 13.14.—Jews from, persecute Paul at Lystra, 14.19.

Aquila, ak'we'-la [an eagle], a Jew of Pontus, in Asia Minor, who, with his wife Priscilla, had been driven from Rome by the decree of the emperor Claudius. Paul finds them at Corinth, on his first visit to that city, Ac. 18.2; they go with Paul to Syria, 18.

Ar, ar [a city], the capital of Moab, south of the river Arnon, and on the east of the Dead Sea;—it was burned by the Ammonites, Nu. 21.28.—cf. Is. 15.1. The ruins bear the name of Rabba.

Arab, a'rab [ambush], a town in the mountains of Judah, Jos. 15.52.

Arabab, ar'-ra-bah [desert], the name given to the whole Jordan valley, down to eastern gulf of the Red Sea, a distance in all of about 150 miles. The name is found only once in the English Bible, Jos. 18.18, where it is the name of a district in Benjamin, called also Beth-Arabab, Jos. 15.61.

Arabia, a-ri'-be-a [wild desert], an extensive country of Asia; is about 7000 miles in length, and 1000 in breadth. It is bounded by the Indian Ocean on the south, the Red Sea and the Isthmus of Suez on the west, Canaan and part of Syria on the north-west and north, and the mountains of Chaldea and the Persian Gulf on the east. It is divided by the Greek geograph phers into Arabia Petrea, or the Rocky, on the north-west, comprehending what was formerly the land of Midian; Arabia Deserta, or the Desert, on the east of Canaan, the country of the Ishmaelites, now in country of the Bedouins; and Arabia Felix, or the Happy, on the south. It contains vast sandy deserts in the interior, but on the coasts it is fertile and beautiful. Its earliest name in Scripture is the 'east country,' Ge. 25.6;—and its inhabitants were called 'children of the east,' Ju. 6.3; 12.15; 15.21;—the burden or punishment of, Is. 21.13; Je. 25.24;—Paul went into it, Gal. 1.17.

Ark, of Noah, Ge. 6.14;—it was from 100 (comp. Ge. 5.32; 7.36) to 120 years in building (comp. Ge. 6.3; 1 Pe. 3.20). According to the usual calculation it was 450 feet long, 75 wide, and 45 deep; divided into three stories.

Ark of Bulrushes, in which Moses was exposed among the flags of the Nile, Ex. 2.3.

Ark of the Covenant (Jos. 3.6; He. 9.4), a small chest, made of acacia or shittim-wood, overlaid with gold. It was about four feet and a half long, two feet and nine inches broad, and as much in height. Within it were deposited the two tables of the moral law, De. 31.26, a golden pot of the manna, Ex. 16.33, and Aaron's rod that budded, Nu. 17.10; and the top of the chest was covered with two golden cherubim. Here the lid is called the mercy-seat, over which the Shakinah hovered like a visible cloud, the emblem of Jehovah's presence. The ark was lost when the temple was destroyed. Though a similar ark was made after the Jews returned from Babylon, yet it never regained its sacred contents;—its dimensions, Ex. 25.10;—made by Bezaleel, 37.1;—placed in the holy of holies, Ex. 26.33; He. 9.3, 4;—carried to the river Jordan, which is divided at its approach, Jos. 3.15;—carried around Jericho, and said to have 'compassed the city' when its walls fell down at the time of its destruction, Jos. 6.6-20;—taken by the Philistines, 1 Sa. 4.11;—Dagon falls before it, 5.3;—returned, 6.10; received by Abinadab, at Kirjath-jearim, where it remained 20 years, 7.1;—brought from thence in a new carriage, when Uzzah was smitten for laying his hands on it, 2 Sa. 6.1, &c.;—received by Obed-Edom, 10;—brought to Jerusalem, 15;—taken with him by David when he fled from Absalom, but sent back again, 15.24;—brought to the temple of Solomon, 2 Ch. 5.2;—the glory of God covers it, and fills the temple, 13;—apsalm composed on the removal of it, Ps. lxxviii;—called the ark of God's strength, 2 Ch. 6.41; Ps. 132.8;—and ark of the testimony, Ex.

30.6; Nu. 7.89;—of the law, Ex. 25.22;—of God, 1 Sa. 3.3;—of the Lord, Nu. 10.33; 2 Sa. 6.2;—referred to as the glory of Israel, 1 Sa. 4.21, 22. It was eminently symbolical of the presence of the Lord, and before it the mind of the Lord was consulted, Jos. 7.6-9; Ju. 20.27; 1 Ch. 13.3.

Armenia, ar-mē-ne-a [high-land], a large country of Western Asia, on the north of Mesopotamia, and on the east of Cappadocia. It is generally mountainous, and gives rise to the Tigris and the Euphrates. It is 430 miles from east to west, and 300 from north to south. It is divided into 15 provinces, of which Ararat is the central. It was reduced to a Persian province of Cyrus. The Armenians profess Christianity, but in a very corrupted state, having departed very far from the purity of the gospel, both in doctrine and worship. They form a distinct religious community, known by the name of the Armenian Church, which is governed by four patriarchs, by archbishops, doctors, secular priests, and monks. Armenia is now subject to the Turks. In 2 Ki. 19.37; Is. 37.38, the Hebrew word Ararat is rendered by the word Armenia. This country is identical with Togarmah, Ge. 10.3; Ezr. 27.14; 38.6.

Asia, as'he-a, one of the quarters into which geographers have divided the earth;—has been the scene of the most wonderful events in the history of man;—here the human race were created;—the Jews were planted;—the Sacred Scriptures chiefly indited;—the Son of God accomplished our redemption;—and from it the gospel was diffused through the world. Asia mentioned in the N. T., for the word is not found in the O. T., is usually divided into two parts, Asia Major and Asia Minor. Asia Major comprehends by far the most extensive eastern parts of the continent;—Canaan, Assyria, Syria, Arabia, Persia, Mesopotamia, Armenia, and Cilicia. Asia Minor, in the form of a peninsula, is bounded on the north by the Euxine Sea, on the south and west by the Mediterranean Sea, and on the east by Armenia, &c. It is about 960 miles in length, and 400 in breadth; and the chief divisions of it are, Mysia, Lydia, Caria, Lycia, Pamphylia, Pisidia, Galatia, Lycania, Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Pontus, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and the islands of Cyprus and Rhodes. As used in Ac. 9.26; 6.9; 13.20, 26, 27; 2 Ti. 1.15; 1 Pe. 1.1, it means Proconular Asia, comprehending only Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, and Lydia.

Assurance, (1) Of understanding, i.e. perfect knowledge and entire persuasion of the doctrine of Christ, Col. 2.2.—(2) Of faith, a firm belief in Christ, entire trust in his sacrifice and priestly office, He. 10.22. (3) Of hope, a firm conviction that God will grant what he has promised, He. 6.11. This word is commonly used to denote a firm persuasion of our being in a state of salvation. But this assurance does not belong to the essence of faith. It is a result or consequence of faith, posterior to it in the order of nature, and frequently so also in the order of time. This grace of assurance has been attained by saints, Job 19.25; Ps. 17.15; 23.4; 73.24; Ro. 8.38, 39; 2 Ti. 1.12; 4.18; 1 Jn. 2.5, 14, 15;—we are exhorted to seek after it, 2 Co. 13.5; He. 6.11; 1 Th. 5.21; 2 Pe. 1.10;—people of God sometimes deprived of it, Job 13.24; 23.9; 29.3; Ps. 44.24; 77.7; 88.14; Is. 50.10.

Assyria, as-sy'-e, the country of Assyria and the Assyrian empire are to be distinguished. The empire comprehended Babylonia and Mesopotamia. In its widest sense the Assyrian empire comprehended all the countries which lay between the Mediterranean and the Indus, Ge. 2.14; 2 Ki. 15.29; 17.6; Is. 11.11; 19.23, 24, 25; Zep. 2.13, &c.;—many of the prophecies of Nahum and Zephaniah were fulfilled in its overthrow.

Assyrians, the people of Assyria proper, of which Nineveh was the capital. Their country lay on the Tigris, and was bounded on the north by the mountains of Armenia, in the south by Susiana and Babylonia, on the east by a part of Media and the mountain range of Zagros or mountains of Kurdistan, and on the west by the Tigris and Mesopotamia. Its modern name is Kurdistan. In extent it is about the size of Great Britain. Their conquest of Syria foretold, Is. 8.4, &c.; 10.5, &c.;—to be punished, ro. 12, 26; 14.24; 30.31; 31.8;—their glory and destruction, Eze. 31.3;—to be wasted, Mi. 5.6; Zep. 2.13. The recent discoveries that have been made among the ruins of Nineveh throw much light on the history of the Assyrian empire.

Astonied, or ASTONISHED it generally means filled with perplexity, fear, or wonder, Ezr. 9.3, 4; Is. 52.14; Da. 3.24; 4.19; Mat. 7.28; 22.33; Lu. 2.47; 5.9; Ac. 9.6.

Astonishment, surprise, amazement, De. 28.28, 37; 2 Ch. 7.21; Ps. 60.3; Je. 8.21; 42.18; Eze. 4.16; 23.33.

Astray, out of the right way, Ps. 119.176; Pr. 5.23; 1 Pe. 2.25.

Astrologers, men who, by observing the motion of the heavenly bodies, pretend to foretell future events, Is. 47.13; Da. 1.20; 2.27; 4.7; 5.7.

Athaliah, ath-a'-li'ah (remembered of Jehovah), (1) Daughter of Ahab and Jezebel; she was the wife of Joram king of Judah, and mother of Ahaziah. She destroys the seed-royal, 2 Ki. 11.1; 2 Ch. 22.10;—her death, 2 Ki. 11.2; 2 Ch. 22.16;—23.2.—(2) One of the sons of Jeroham, 1 Ch. 8.26.—(3) The father of Jeshaiab, Ezr. 8.7.

Atheists, the proper designation of those who deny the being of God, Ps. 14.1; 53.1; Pr. 30.9;—deny his providence, Job 21.15; 22.13; 34.9; Ps. 10.11; 73.11; 78.19; 94.7;—deny him in their works, Ex. 5.2; Job 31.28; Tit. 1.16.

Athens, ath'ens [city of Minerva], a city of Greece, the capital of Attica, situated about 46 miles east of Corinth. It was founded by Cecrops about 1550 years before Christ, and therefore it is one of the most ancient remaining in the world. It was the most eminent in population, wealth, magnificence, commerce, literature, philosophy, oratory, poetry, and the fine arts. Idolatry in it was notorious; and the number of their gods is reckoned by Hesiod at 30,000. Petronius said it 'was easier to find a god in Athens than a man.' It produced Solon, Socrates, Demosthenes, &c., besides many renowned generals;—here Paul preached, Ac. 17.16–22. It was governed by the Romans before the time of Christ; and in the fourth and fifth centuries it was pillaged by the Goths. Since 1455 it was under the slavery of the Turks. It suffered dreadfully in the war between the Greeks and Turks, yet it bravely sustained three sieges; twice in the year 1822, and finally in 1826; and now it is free, the capital of the kingdom of Greece. Its population is above 40,000.

Babel, ba'bel [confusion, mixture], TOWER of, mentioned only once in Scripture, built in the plain of Shinar, 102 years after the flood. Materials of brick were prepared three years, and the building was carried on twenty-two years. It was of prodigious extent and height. About 1700 years after its erection, Herodotus saw a structure at Babylon, consisting of eight towers, raised one above another, and each 75 feet, in whole 600; and above the highest was built the temple of Belus. Strabo says it was 600 feet in height. The top of the tower was reached by an easy sloping ascent on the outside of the building, which went round it in a spiral form. In different portions were large rooms, with arched roofs, supported by pillars. The temple of Belus was supposed to be the ancient tower, but it is probable that it was a much more recent building. The building of Babel, and the confusion of tongues there, Ge. 11.7–9. The name Babel (in Heb.) was afterwards applied to the city Babylon, Ge. 10.10, and to the whole province of which it was the capital, Eze. 23.17, margin.

God reveals divine truth to them, Mat. 11:25; Lu. 10:21.

Babylon, bāb'lon [confusion, mixture], in Hebrew and Chald. Babel, the capital of the country called Shinar in Genesis, and in the later Scriptures Chaldea. Besides its application to the city of Babylon, the name (in Heb.) is also used to denote the district of Chaldea lying between the Tigris and the Euphrates (2 Ki. 24:1; 25:7), as well as Babylonia, the province of the Assyrian empire (2 Ch. 32:31; 33:11), and also Persia, Ezr. 5:13. The city of Babylon was the capital of the province of Babylon, and of the Chaldean empire. It was one of the most magnificent cities that ever existed. It was built by Nimrod, the great-grandson of Noah, in the place where the tower of Babel was erected. This city was an exact square, built on a large plain, and was 56 miles in circumference, 14 miles on each side. The walls were 87 feet thick, 335 in height, and 100 gates of solid brass, 25 on each side. It had fifteen streets crossing one another at right angles, each 150 feet wide; and the whole city contained 676 squares. The famous hanging gardens, as they are termed, were a succession of terraces, raised on arches. The river Euphrates ran through this city. Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, in 1648 years after Nimrod, and 588 before Christ, burned the temple of Jerusalem, and carried many of the Jews to it, 2 Ki. 25:8, 9; Je. 52:12-30;—the inhabitants were remarkable for their superstitions, lewd, and debauched practices, and, in consequence, severe judgments were specially threatened against them, Is. 13:1-22; 14:22, 23; 47:10-15;—its destruction foretold, Is. 13:1, &c.; 14:4, 47:1;—by the Medes and Persians, 21:2;—their idols cannot save them, 46:1; Je. 52:15, 18, 35; 51:1, &c.;—Daniel was a captive in it, Da. 1:1, 2;—the king built a great golden image, 1:1-7;—was besieged by Cyrus (B.C. 538), and the king, Belshazzar, was slain, 5:17-31;—Cyrus liberated the Jews, and sent them to rebuild the temple, 2 Ch. 36:22;—Darius, king of Persia, demolished its gates and walls, B.C. 538;—Xerxes pillaged the temple of Belus in the year 478;—Alexander the Great intended to renew it, but he soon died, 323;—Seleucus Nicator carried away about 500,000 people to a new city called Seleucia on the Tigris;—a few people continued till the first century of Christ; but, in the second, it was deserted, and fell into ruins. The ruins of this once famous city are found near the modern village of Hillah, on the west bank of the Euphrates, about 50 miles south of Bagdad. The most remarkable of all the mounds found in that region is the vast ruin called Birs Nimrud, about 6 miles south-west of Hillah, and which is supposed by some, though on insufficient grounds, to represent the tower of Babel. The mound called Babel is supposed to represent the temple of Belus; the mound of the Kasr ('palace') the great palace of Nebuchadnezzar; and the mound of Amran the 'hanging gardens.' There are many other great masses of ruins on both sides of the Euphrates not yet fully explored.

Babylon the Great, said also to be 'the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth,' is a symbolical title of Papal Rome, or the antichristian power, represented by the Popish church, Re. 17:5;—its fall predicted, 14:8; 18:2;—description of certain of its features, 18:1-14.—The Babylon mentioned in 1 Pe. 5:13 is supposed by some to have been a place in Egypt, and by others the enigmatical title of Rome (Re. 17:5); but most probably it refers simply to the Chaldean Babylon, where that epistle was composed, and where it is known a large number of Jews resided.

84:6;—the plur. of this word is rendered 'mulberry-trees' in 2 Sa. 5:23, 24; 1 Ch. 14:15.

Beth-Gr-mul, beth-ga'-mul [house of a camel], a city of Judah, Eze. 48.23. It is called U' Yamad. 'This,' says Mr. Graham, 'is perhaps among the most perfect of the old cities I saw. It is surrounded by a high wall forming a rectangle, which seems to inclose more space than the modern Jerusalem. The streets are many of them paved.—The houses were some of them very large, consisting usually of three rooms on the ground-floor and two on the first story, the stairs being formed of large stones built into the house-walls and leading up outside. The doors were, as usual, of stone; sometimes folding-doors, and some of them highly ornamented. . . . Taking my rifle with me, I wandered about quite alone in the old streets of the town, entered one by one the old houses, went up stairs, visited the rooms, and in short, made a careful examination of the whole place; but so perfect was every street, every house, every room, that I almost fancied I was in a dream wandering alone in this city of the dead, seeing all perfect yet not hearing a sound' (Blakie's Bible History, p. 124, n.). Bible, the name used since about the fourth century to denote the volume of sacred writings. It is from the Greek word biblos, signifying book. The different parts of this sacred volume were composed at different periods, during a space of about 1600 years from the time of Moses downward. The books constituting the O. T. (thirty-nine in number) were collected in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, after the return from Babylon. The collection of the books of the N. T. (twenty-seven in number) was gradually formed during the second century. The first complete translation of the Bible into English was completed by Wyckliffe, in 1384, about sixty years before the discovery of the art of printing. The N. T. was first printed by Tyndale at Worms in 1525, and the Pentateuch in 1530. Till his death, in 1536, he was engaged in sending forth different editions of the N. T., and of portions of the O. T. Coverdale's translation was published in 1535, and was the first complete English Bible printed; it was dedicated to Henry VIII. Tyndale's version was completed by Matthew, and printed in 1537. In 1539, Coverdale's Bible, revised under the sanction of Cranmer, was published. It was printed in large folio, and called the Great Bible. In 1540 another edition of it was printed 'by authority,' with a preface by Cranmer, and hence was called Cranmer's Bible. During the brief reign of Edward VI. eleven editions were printed. During Mary's persecution, Whittingham, Knox, &c., in their exile, made a new translation in Geneva. The N. T. was printed in 1557, the Old in 1560. It was called the Geneva Bible. Archbishop Parker, with the sanction of Queen Elizabeth, and aided by various bishops, revised the existing translations, and published an edition in 1568, which was called the Bishops' Bible. This continued to be in common use in the churches, as reprinted in 1572, under the name of Matthew Parker's Bible, for about forty years. King James resolved to publish a revised translation, and for this purpose appointed 54 learned men, 47 of whom only undertook the work, which was completed and published in 1611, and has ever since been our Authorized English Version. The division of the Scriptures into chapters and verses is comparatively a modern invention; and, having been resorted to for the purpose of facilitating reference, and not for distinguishing the several subjects, the divisions are not always the most fortunate. The division into chapters, as they now stand in the Old and New Testaments, is generally ascribed to the schoolmen who, with Cardinal Hugo of St. Cher, prepared in A.D. 1240 a concordance for the Vulgate translation. The Latin Bible, with Astiles or brief notes, published by this cardinal, was the first that contained chapters. The verses into which the New Testament is divided were introduced by Henry Stephen in 1551, and in this he followed the plan which had been applied by the Masoretes to the Hebrew Scriptures. Bichri, bik'ri [first-born, or first-fruits], the father of Sheba, 1 Sa. 20.1, 2, 6, 22.

Burdensome, grievous, troublesome, Zec. 12.1; 2 Co. 11.9; 12.13, 14.

Burial, the Jews did, to their dead enemies, 1 Ki. 11.15—the want of it a calamity, De. 28.26; Ps. 79.2; Ec. 6.3; Is. 14.19; Je. 7.33; 16.4, 6; 25.33; 34.20—a pompous one of Jacob, Ge. 50.7, &c.—body of deceased washed and laid out for, Ac. 9.37—of Lazarus, Jn. 11.44—of Jesus, Mat. 27.57.

Burn, to inflame with anger, La. 2.3—violent lusts, 1 Co. 7.9—holy zeal, 2 Co. 11.29.

Burning Bush, the Lord appeared in, to Moses, at the foot of Mount Horeb, Ex. 3.2.

Burnished, polished, Eze. 1.7.

Burnt-offerings, daily, Ex. 29.38–42; Nu. 28.3–8—on the great festivals, Le. 23.37; Nu. 28.11–27; 29.2–22; Le. 16.3—on Sabbath, Nu. 28.10—offered at other times, Ex. 29.15; Le. 12.6, 8; 14.19; 15.15, 30.

Burst, to break asunder, Pr. 3.10; Je. 2.20; Mar. 2.21; Ac. 1.18.

Bushel, a corn measure, the Roman modius = 2 gallons = $\frac{1}{4}$ of an English bushel, Mat. 5.15; Mar. 4.21.

Bushy, full of small branches, Ca. 5.11.

Business, diligence in, commanded, Ro. 12.11; 1 Th. 4.11; 2 Th. 3.12—advantages of, Pr. 22.9; Ep. 4.28—the neglect of, to be punished, Pr. 19.15; 2 Th. 3.10.

Busy-bodies, officious persons, who meddle with other people's concerns, censured, Pr. 20.3; 26.17; 1 Th. 4.11; 2 Th. 3.1; 1 Ti. 5.13; 1 Pe. 4.15.

Butler [bottler], a servant employed in furnishing the table, Ge. 40.1, 9, 12; 41.9; Is. 7.15; Ne. 1.11.

Butter, as used in Scripture, sour or coagulated milk, which, mixed with water, makes a refreshing beverage, Ge. 18.8; De. 32.14. Job 29.6, 'I washed my steps with butter,' denotes abundance.

Buttocks, the thickest part of the thigh, 2 Sa. 10.4; Is. 20.4.

Buy, the truth, Pr. 23.23—the blessings of salvation without money, Is. 55.1—Christ bought his people, Ac. 20.28; 1 Co. 6.20; 1 Pe. 1.18.

Buz [contempt], the son of Nahor, by Milcah, and ancestor of Elihu, the companion of Job, Ge. 22.21; Job 32.2; Je. 25.23.

Buzi, bu'zi, a priest, the father of the prophet Ezekiel, Eze. 1.3.

C.

Cab, a measure containing one-third of an omer, or an eighteenth part of an ephah, about 33 pints wine measure—during the siege of Samaria, the fourth-part of a cab of doves' dung, or rather chick-pease, was sold for five pieces of silver, 2 Ki. 6.25.

Carbon, kā'b'on [cake], a place in the plain of Judah—a city in the tribe of Judah, Jos. 15.40.

Cabin, small cells for the separate confinement of prisoners, Je. 37.16.

Cabul, kā'b'ul [bound, boundary, as nothing], (1) A city on the frontier of the lot of Asher, Jos. 10.27; probably the modern Kabul, 8 miles east of Acocho.—(2) A district of 'twenty cities,' that Solomon gave to Hiram, king of Tyre, 1 Ki. 9.10–13.

Cæsar. See CESAR.

Cage, for birds, or wild beasts, Je. 5.27; same word rendered 'basket,' Am. 8.1—in Re. 18.2 used in sense of prison.

Caiaphas, kāy'a-fas, a high-priest at the time Christ was put to death: the office was formerly for life, but at this time the Romans appointed to the office and removed from it at their pleasure—his advice to put Jesus to death, Jn. 11.49; 18.14—Jesus examined before him, Mat. 26.57; Mar. 14.53; Lu. 22.54; Jn. 18.14—he belonged to the sect of the Sadducees, Ac. 5.17. Annas was probably his vicar or deputy.

Cain, kain [possession, lance], (1) The eldest son of Adam—his mother, too sanguine in her hopes, seems to have imagined that he was the promised seed, when she called him a man, the Lord, Ge. 4.1—a tiller of the ground, 2—offered fruit, 3—was angry, and reproved by the Lord, 5–7—kills his brother Abel, 8—alluded to with censure, 1 Jn. 3.12; Jude 11.—(2) A city in the lowlands of Judah, Jos. 15.57.

Calnan, ky'nan [possession], the son of Enos, and father of Mahalalel, Ge. 5:9-14. In Lu. 3:36 he is called the son of Arphaxad, but probably this was another of the same name.

Cakes, bread of fine flour, Ex. 12:30; Le. 7:12; Nu. 15:20; Ju. 7:13;—the 'cake not turned'—mixture of truth and error, Ho. 7:8.

Calah, ka'lah [vigorous old age], one of the most ancient of the cities of Assyria, Ge. 10:12; probably represented by the modern Nimrud.

Calamities. See AFFLICTIONS.

Calamus, an aromatic plant, an ingredient in the sacred perfume, Ex. 30:23; Ca. 4:14;—an article in the trade of Tyre, Eze. 27:19;—called SWEET CANE, Is. 43:24; Je. 6:20.

Calcol, kal'kol, one of the five sons of Mahol, who were famous for their wisdom, 1Ch. 2:6;—called Chalcol, 1Ki. 4:31.

Caldron, a large cooking vessel, 1Sa. 2:14;—an emblem of the destruction of Jerusalem, Eze. 11:3, 17.

Caleb, ka'leb [a dog, or the valiant hero], (1) the son of Jephunneh, was one of the twelve who were sent by Moses to spy the land;—gives a good account of the land of Canaan, Nu. 13:30; 14:6; De. 1:36;—obtains Hebron, Jos. 14:6; 15:13;—(2) The son of Hur, his descendants, 1Ch. 2:50;—(3) A district about Carmel, of Judah, allotted to Caleb, 1Sa. 30:14; Jos. 14:13.

Call, made by Aaron, in imitation of the Egyptian idol Apis, Ex. 32:4;—Jeroboam made two golden calves, and set one in Bethel and the other in Dan, 1Ki. 12:28;—the calves were a snare to the people till the time of the captivity;—a fattened, the choicest animal food, 1Sa. 28:24; Am. 6:4; Lu. 15:23.

Calkers, carpenters, who build and repair ships, Eze. 27:9, 27.

Call, God's invitation in the gospel, addressed to all men, Pr. 8:4; Is. 45:22; 55:1; Mar. 16:15; Jn. 7:37; Re. 22:17;—rejected by many, Mat. 20:16; 22:14; Jn. 5:40;—awful doom of those who refuse, Pr. 1:24, &c.; Je. 26:4-6; 35:17; Ac. 13:46; 18:6; He. 12:25; Mat. 22:3-7; Re. 2:5.

—, effectual, when men yield to the Spirit and come to Christ;—it is a call from death to life, Jn. 5:24, 25;—from darkness to light, Ac. 26:18; 1Pe. 2:9;—from bondage to liberty, Ga. 5:13;—from fellowship with the world to the fellowship of Christ, 1Co. 1:9;—from enmity to peace, 1Co. 7:15; Col. 3:15;—from sin to holiness, 1Th. 4:7;—from misery to happiness, 1Co. 7:15;—made effectual, Ps. 110:3; Ac. 13:48; 2:47. Calma, repose, rest, Ps. 107:29; Jonah 1:11, 12; Mat. 8:26.

Calneh, kal'ne [fortified dwelling], a city on the west bank of the Tigris, built by Nimrod, Ge. 10:10; supposed to be the same as Calno, Is. 10:9, and Canneh, whose inhabitants traded with the Tyrians, Eze. 27:23;—its site identified by some with the modern Niffer, 50 miles south-east of Babylon.

Calvary, kal'va-re [skull], mentioned but once, in Lu. 23:33 in the Greek Cranion, a skull, as the place where Christ was crucified. It is a term adopted from the Vulgate version, so called because executions were performed there, and skulls were probably left lying on the ground; or probably because it was a bare round spot like a skull. In Jn. 19:17 it is called Golgotha. The identity of the present site of Calvary is doubtful.

Calve, to bring forth young, Job 21:10; 39:1; Ps. 29:9; Je. 14:5.

Calves, young cows, Ps. 68:30; Ho. 10:5; 13:2; He. 9:12, 19;—of the lips, figuratively represents praise to God, Ho. 14:2; Re. 13:15.

Camel [carrier], a large quadruped, with a long and slender neck, long legs, and short ears; and which can carry a heavy burden, and travel long without drink, during intense heat. The Bactrian camel has two humps on its back, while that generally mentioned in Scripture has only one. Abraham had many, Ge. 12:16;—Job had three thousand, Job 1:3;—coarse raiment made of their hair, Jahn, Mat. 3:4; 2Ki. 1:8; Eze. 13:4. The dromedary is a smaller and nimbler species of the camel, Is. 66:20; Je. 2:23.

Camon, ka'mon [full of stalks], the burial-place of Jair the Gileadite, Ju. 10:5.

Camp, the order of tents for the Hebrews in the desert; forty-one encampments in the journey through the wilderness are mentioned, Nu. xxxiii. The form of encamping described, Nu. 2:2, 3;—the tabernacle was placed in the midst, and Moses, Aaron, and their families had their tents on the east of it; and the angel of the Lord went before the camp, Ex. 14:19;—an army in the open air, 1Sa. 4:6.

Camphire, a plant of great beauty and fragrance found in Egypt and the East, called al-henna and khofreh by the Nubians. From its leaves an orange dye is made, Ca. 1:14; 4:13.

Cana, ka'nah, OF GALILEE [reedy], (1) a village about eight miles north of Nazareth, and sixteen from the lake;—Jesus' first miracle here, Jn. 2:1, &c. It was the native place of Nathanael, 21:2. The true site of Cana is disputed. The probability is that Kana-el-Yellil is the true site.—(2) A town of the tribe of Asher, near Sidon, Jos. 19:28.

Canaan, ka'nan [low or lowland], (1) The fourth son of Ham, who sported with his father's shame, Ge. 9:22;—was cursed, 25;—his posterity was numerous and was subjugated by the Israelites, the descendants of Shem, thus fulfilling Noah's prophecy, 2Ch. 7:9. His eldest son Zidon was founder of the city of the same name.—(2) THE LAND OF, so named from Canaan, the son of Ham, bounded by Arabia on the east; on the south by the wilderness of Paran, Idumea, and Egypt; on the west by the Mediterranean; and on the north by the mountains of Lebanon. Canaan proper was about 158 miles long, and on an average about 40 broad. As occupied by all the tribes, including those on the east of Jordan, it consisted of about 19,000 square miles. But as extended by conquest in the time of David and Solomon the kingdom reached to the Euphrates, and to the remotest confines of Edom and Moab, 1Ki. 4:21. It has since been distinguished by other names, such as the Land of Promise, the Holy Land, Judea, and Palestine. It is described as 'a land flowing with milk and honey.' It was well watered, very fruitful, abounding with rich pastures and flowers, and much diversified with hills and valleys, resembling the southern counties of Scotland. From its position its climate was very hot during eight months in the year;—described in reference to many of its natural advantages, De. 8:7-9; 11:10-12;—promised to Abraham, Ge. 12:7;—its boundary, Ex. 23:31; Nu. 34:1; Jos. 1:3;—conquered by Joshua, 11:16;—its kings enumerated, 12:9;—the names of those who were to divide it, Nu. 34:16;—how to be divided, 26:52;—divided by lot, Jos. 14:1, &c.;—its borders not conquered, 13:1; Ju. 2:3;—its ruined cities to be rebuilt, after the return of the Israelites from their dispersion, Is. 49:19; 54:3; 52:9; 54:3; 61:4; Eze. 36:33;—what portion of it will be for the sanctuary, 45:1, &c.;—for the city, 6;—for the prince, 7;—its boundary, 47:13;—its division by lot, 48:1. At the time of Christ it was divided into five provinces, Judea, Samaria, Galilee, Perea, and Idumea. This once beautiful land has been constantly suffering under the horrors of servitude and frequent wars. After the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 71, the land remained almost desolate till about the 4th century, when pilgrims began to resort to it. In the beginning of the 7th century it was occupied by the Saracens, who held it till it was taken by the Crusaders in the 12th. For about 80 years after that it was the scene of constant war between the Christians and Saracens. After passing through various revolutions it was finally absorbed in the Turkish empire in 1317. Its once noble cities are now poor villages, and most of the former villages are utterly extinct. Its barren, poverty-stricken, and altogether ruinous condition affords a remarkable example of the fulfilment of the divine threatening, 'He turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water springs into dry ground; a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein,' Ps. 107:33, 34. Its cities, mountains, rivers, brooks, and valleys are mentioned each apart.

Canaan, Language of, Is. 19:18, the language of the Jews in Palestine, the Hebrew.

Canaanites, idolatrous, to be exterminated, Ex. 23:31; 34:12; Nu. 33:50; De. 20:16;—not wholly conquered by Joshua, 16:10; 17:12; Ju. 1:27, &c.; 2:20; 3:1, &c.;—six nations of, Ex. 3:8, 17; 23:23; 32:2.

Candace, kan-da'se, a queen of Ethiopia, that region in Upper Nubia called by the Greeks Meropé;—her high treasurer converted by the preaching of Philip the evangelist, Ac. 8:27.

Candle, light originally with oil-lamps, Job 18:6;—the soul, Pr. 20:27;—ministers, Mat. 5:15.

Candlestick, for the tabernacle, formed of gold, with six branches, and with oil, Ex. 25:37; 37:17;—stood in the holy place, on the south side, i.e. on the left of the person entering, and opposite the table of show-bread, Ex. 26:35;—shown in vision to Zechariah, Zec. 4:1;—the seven churches, Re. 1:20. In Mat. 5:15, a lamp-stand.

Candour, fair, open, and impartial dealing, commended and exemplified, 2Sa. 12:7; Ps. 15:2, 3; Mat. 7:1, 12; 2Co. 1:12.

Cane, a tall sedgy plant with a hollow stem, 1Ki. 14:15; Job 40:21; Is. 19:6; 35:7;—common in Arabia and Syria;—used in writing. The Hebrew word is usually rendered reed, except in Is. 43:24 and Je. 6:20, where it is rendered cane. Sweet cane (reed of fragrance), enumerated among other aromatic substances, Ca. 4:14; Eze. 27:17. See CALAMUS.

Canneh, kan'ay [a plant], Eze. 27:23; same as Calneh or Calno.

Canker [gangrene], an eating sore ending in mortification, 2Ti. 2:17; Ja. 5:3.

Canker-worm, one that preys upon the fruits, and is much like to the locusts, Joel 1:4; Na. 3:15, 16;—elsewhere called the caterpillar, Je. 51:27; Ps. 105:34.

Canticles, kan'ti-kels [song], the Latin name given to the Song of Solomon.

Capernaum, ka-per'na-um [city of comfort], a city on the north-west shore of the Sea of Galilee, and distant about ninety-six miles from Jerusalem, Mat. 4:13, 14;—here Christ preached to multitudes, and performed many mighty works, Mat. 8:5; Lu. 7:1; Mat. 8:14; Lu. 4:38; Mat. 9:1; Mar. 2:1; 3:33; Lu. 4:33. Christ uttered a fearful prophecy against, Mat. 11:23; Lu. 10:15. In Christ's day it was a flourishing town, Mat. 11:23;—Jesus very frequently visited this city, it was called 'his own city,' Lu. 4:16-31. The site of this city is still matter of dispute.

Caphtor, kaf'tor [chaplet, knop], the original seat of the Philistines, De. 2:23; Am. 9:7;—it is called an 'isle' or coast country, Je. 47:4. Some say that it was Cappadocia, others the island of Cyprus, others the coasts of the Egyptian Delta. Most probably it was Upper Egypt.

Caphtorim, kaf'tor-im, the Philistines, De. 2:23;—the descendants of Mizraim, Ge. 10:14.

Cappadocia, ka-pa-do'she'a, the most eastern province of Asia Minor, extending from Mount Taurus to the Euxine Sea, and was bounded by Pontus on the north, Lycaonia and part of Armenia on the south, Galatia on the west, and by the Euphrates on the east. It contained many rich and populous cities;—persons from it present in Jerusalem, when the apostles preached, Ac. 2:9;—Peter addresses the strangers in, 1Pe. 1:1. It became a Roman province A.D. 17. It was wrested from the Romans by the Turks, under whose dominion it continues. A number of Christians still remain, but greatly corrupted. It is now called Amasia.

Captain, a military officer, Jos. 10:24; Ju. 11:6, 11; Is. 22:3;—the praetorian prefect, Ac. 28:16;—the superintendent of the priests who kept watch in the temple by night, Ac. 4:1; 5:24;—Christ, captain of salvation, He. 2:10.

Captive, one taken prisoner, Ge. 14:14; Ex. 12:29; Ps. 106:46; 137:3; Je. 13:17, 19; Da. 11:8.

Captives, female, how to be treated, De. 21:10.

Captivity, slavery, or bondage, of the ten tribes forming the kingdom of Israel, by the Assyrian Shalmanezzer, B.C. 720, 2Ki. 15:29; 17:3-5; 1Ch. 5:26;—of the two tribes, the kingdom of Judah, by the Chaldeans, 2Ki. xxiv.; 2Ch. xxxvi.; Je. xxv. xxvii. xxix. xxxii. xxxiv. li.; Eze. xlii.; Da. 1:1;—the sufferings of the captivity, Ps. 137:1-5; Je. 49:31. Carbuncle [flashing as lightning], a very elegant gem, of a deep red colour, mingled with scarlet. It was the third in the first row of the high-priest's breastplate, Ex. 28:17; Is. 54:12; Eze. 28:13. Under this name are comprehended several brilliant stones of the same family, as the ruby and the garnet.

Carcase, a dead body of man or beast, Le. 5:2; Is. 14:19; Mat. 24:28.

Carchemish, kar'ke-mish [fortress of Chemosh], a town of the Assyrians, on the banks of the Euphrates. It commanded the passage of the river, and was therefore the battle-field of Egypt and Assyria, Is. 10:9; Je. 66:2;—taken by the Egyptians, 2Ch. 35:20;—retaken by Nebuchadnezzar, Je. 46:1-12.

Cariah, ka-re'ah, 1Ki. 25:23; Je. 40:8.

Carefulness, great care, vigilance, Eze. 12:18; 1Co. 7:32; 2Co. 7:11.

Careless Persons, or those who are secure and unconcerned, called to serious thoughtfulness, Is. 32:9-11.

Cares, anxious. See ANXIETY.

Carmel, kar'mel [park, garden], (1) A city in the mountains of Judah, ten miles south-east of Hebron, Jos. 15:55;—here Saul erected a monument, 1Sa. 15:12;—here Nabal dwelt, 25:5.—(2) A celebrated mountain on the coast of the Mediterranean. It is about 1728 feet in height. This range extends about twenty-eight miles, and in the south-east is connected with the mountains of Samaria. For its beauty and luxuriant forests it was compared with Bashan, Ca. 7:5; Is. 33:9; 35:2; Je. 46:18. Here Elijah offered his sacrifice, which was consumed by fire from heaven, 1Ki. 18:21-38;—here 450 prophets of Baal were slain, 40. Carmel is now called Tebel Mar Elias.

Deluge, the universal flood of the earth (B.C. 2356). When the race of man had greatly increased on the earth, wickedness in every form began to abound, every imagination of the thought of the human heart was only evil continually. But in the midst of the world of crime and guilt 'Noah was a just man and walked with God.' For 120 years God warned mankind of the coming deluge by means of Noah. They repented not at the warning, at last the flood came and swept them all away. The history of this is given in Ge. vi. viii. The deluge lasted for 12 lunar months and 10 days. Noah and his family were 370 days in the ark. Referred to in N. T., Mat. 24. 37; Lu. 17. 26; 2 Pe. 2. 5.

Jerusalem, jē-rū'sa-lem [foundation or habitation of peace], the metropolis of the kingdom of Judah, and the seat of government during the reigns of David, Solomon, and their successors. It is distant from the Dead Sea and Jordan valley 15 miles, and from the Mediterranean 31 miles. It was called Salem [peace], in the time of Abraham, Ge. 14:18; He. 7:2. It is so called also in Ps. 76:2; and it was called Jebus at the time Israel obtained possession of the Holy Land, Jos. 15:8; 18:28; 1 Ch. 11:4. It seems probable, therefore, that the name Jerusalem is merely a compound of the terms Jebus and Salem. It is called Zion, 1 Ki. 8:1;—city of God, Ps. 46:4;—city of the Great King, Ps. 48:2;—the holy city, Ne. 11:1-18;—city of solemnities, Is. 33:20. In its most flourishing state it consisted of four parts, built on four hills; namely, Zion, Acra, Moriah, and Bethetha. In fact, the whole foundation was a high rock, with four heads or hills, and with steep ascents on every side, except the north; and surrounded with a deep valley, which was embosomed with hills. The city was encompassed with three walls, over which there were towers, and appears to have been about 4½ miles in circumference. It was taken by the children of Judah, Ju. 1. 8;—partly inhabited by the Jebusites, 21;—by David, 2 Sa. 5. 6; 1 Ch. 11. 4;—expulsed with, and threatened for its crimes, Je. 1. 15; ii. 3; 4. 19; v. 19; &c.; 11. 1, &c.; Eze. xxi. 22. 1, &c.;—described as an exposed infant, 16. 1, &c.;—taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Ki. 25. 4; 2 Ch. 36. 17; Je. 39. 1; 52. 4, &c.;—burned, 52. 12;—represented as a female captive, Is. 3. 26;—its desolation lamented, La. 1. &c.;—its captivity represented by a figure, Eze. 1. 5; 1;—to be rebuilt, Je. 31. 38;—built after the captivity, Ne. 3. 1, &c.;—after much opposition, 4. 1, &c.;—its walls finished, 6. 15;—its inhabitants chosen by lot, 11. 1, &c.;—the dedication of its walls, 12. 27;—its future state, Eze. 48. 30;—its new name, 35;—Christ's lamentation over it, Mat. 23. 37;—foretells the destruction of the temple, and of it, 24. 28;—it represents the gospel, Ga. 4. 26;—a new one descending from heaven, Re. 21. 10. About seventy years after Christ it was besieged, taken, sacked, and burned by Titus. Above 1,000,000 of the Jews perished, and 97,000 were taken prisoners; and our Saviour's prediction—that it should become a heap of ruins—was fully verified. It gradually became settled again; but in the year 134 the Emperor Adrian banished all the Jews, prohibiting their return on pain of death. The temple was demolished, and the site ploughed up. Several hundred years after, this city was again rebuilt. In the year 614 the Persians captured it, and 90,000 Christians were slain. In 637 the Saracens seized it, and kept it till 1079, when the Turks became its masters. It was taken by the first Crusaders in 1099, and held by the Christians till 1187, when it was taken by Saladin. After varied changes it was taken by the Sultan Selim I. in 1517. In 1542 its present walls were built by Soliman the Magnificent. In 1832 the Pasha of Egypt occupied it, but in 1841 it once more passed under the Turkish sceptre. Under the auspices of the 'Palestine Exploration Fund' it is now being explored by means of excavations, which have already brought to light many very interesting facts regarding the ancient city, over the ruins of which the modern one is built. Its present population is about 16,000, of whom 4000 are Moslems, 8000 Jews, 8000 Greeks, 1300 Latins, and about 900 of various nations.
